Urges Defence Be Considered In Road Planning

QUEBEC, Oct. 20 (CP) -M.D. Rawling, president of the Canadian Good Roads Association, said today national road planning should take care of civil, military and civil defence requirements. He told the association's 33rd annual convention that governments, taxpayers and users of roads did not always accept the fact that "no society functions, and no nation becomes great, without proper communications and transportation." Mr. Rawling, minister of highways and road works for Nova Scotia, said "the federal authority has relegated roads to a secondary role with the assumption that... no particular effort need be made to integrate them into the pattern of national defence." Proposed expenditure for highway improvement in Canada's 10 provinces this year amounted to $350,000,000. The amount exceeded proposed expenditures by cities, towns and municipalities.

Town Given Until Nov. 15 To Bid On Old Building

It is understood that the Town of Summerside has been given until November 15 to make a final bid on the old post office property. If no bid is placed by the town at that time the building will be advertised for public sale by the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation who have the selling of this building. In view of this fact it is believed that a decision, one way or the other, will probably be made by the council at its next regular meeting scheduled for November 10th. Since this building was vacated last winter when the post office and customs moved to the new larger building there has been increasing public comment supporting the suggested purchase of this building by the town. Many suggestions have been heard for its possible use by the town. These include, new and larger offices for the town hall, and the police department, new quarters for the public library, and a location for a provincial or county museum. The building is very centrally located on Summer Street about three short blocks from Water Street and it is generally agreed that the site is, because of its location, a valuable asset in itself. Those who do express unqualified support for its purchase by the town, say that the roof would require major and costly repairs, the replacement and that a new heating system would have to be installed. Others say that while the site might one day be valuable to the town, there is not sufficient use of the building to justify its purchase at the present time.-S

Side Planes Find Weather Bad In Search Area

Eleven twin engine DAKOTA aircraft returned to R.C.A.F. station, Summerside, last evening just after dark, and because of the heavy snow storm which blanketed the air station all were forced to land by instrument on G.C.A. (ground control approach). With Flight Lieutenant W. N. Caddy, co-ordinator of the search in charge of the operation from Summerside, these aircraft had taken off about 10 a.m. yesterday morning despite unfavorable flying conditions to search a 4,000 square mile area in Northern Quebec for a silver and white twin-engine Beechcraft missing on a flight from New York to Goose Bay in Labrador. This plane carrying two men—the pilot and a radio officer—was last heard from about 3 a.m. on Thursday morning when they reported their position over Seven Islands on the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and estimated they would be in Goose Bay in an hour and forty minutes. Previously they had reported their plane was being up, and they had been cleared to descend from 7000 to 5000 feet. This plane carried no parachutes, firearms, emergency radio or safety equipment. The terrain in the area in which the missing plane is assumed to be, is extremely rough and wooded, with deep ravines and gorges, scattered lakes and rivers. There is scarcely any population in the area searched yesterday, no ground communication, and no roads. The ground is completely covered with snow and most of the lakes are frozen over. Because of these conditions it was deemed imperative to quickly find the men if they had survived. No search planes after being used from Summerside today but the search will be continued by aircraft from the Search and Rescue unit at Greenwood, Nova Scotia. One plane from Summerside which was taken part in the search yesterday developed mechanical trouble with its landing wheels which refused to be drawn up, and this plane was recalled to its Summerside base. It was instructed to fly low past the control tower and observation through binoculars from the control tower it was decided that the wheels were locked properly for landing and the big plane was brought in and made a perfect landing. Just to play safe, however, a crash truck had been called on the field and was standing by for any eventuality. The overall search is being directed by a searchmaster from the Search and Rescue unit at Greenwood. On Saturday ten aircraft from the Summerside base took part in the search, and a servicing crew of ten men was flown to Seven Islands to accommodate these aircraft.

It was instructed to fly low past the control tower and observation through binoculars from the control tower it was decided that the wheels were locked properly for landing and the big plane was brought in and made a perfect landing. Just to play safe, however, a crash truck had been called on the field and was standing by for any eventuality. The overall search is being directed by a searchmaster from the Search and Rescue unit at Greenwood. On Saturday ten aircraft from the Summerside base took part in the search, and a servicing crew of ten men was flown to Seven Islands to accommodate these aircraft.

Eleven twin engine DAKOTA aircraft returned to R.C.A.F. station, Summerside, last evening just after dark, and because of the heavy snow storm which blanketed the air station all were forced to land by instrument on G.C.A. (ground control approach). With Flight Lieutenant W. N. Caddy, co-ordinator of the search in charge of the operation from Summerside, these aircraft had taken off about 10 a.m. yesterday morning despite unfavorable flying conditions to search a 4,000 square mile area in Northern Quebec for a silver and white twin-engine Beechcraft missing on a flight from New York to Goose Bay in Labrador. This plane carrying two men—the pilot and a radio officer—was last heard from about 3 a.m. on Thursday morning when they reported their position over Seven Islands on the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and estimated they would be in Goose Bay in an hour and forty minutes. Previously they had reported their plane was being up, and they had been cleared to descend from 7000 to 5000 feet. This plane carried no parachutes, firearms, emergency radio or safety equipment. The terrain in the area in which the missing plane is assumed to be, is extremely rough and wooded, with deep ravines and gorges, scattered lakes and rivers. There is scarcely any population in the area searched yesterday, no ground communication, and no roads. The ground is completely covered with snow and most of the lakes are frozen over. Because of these conditions it was deemed imperative to quickly find the men if they had survived. No search planes after being used from Summerside today but the search will be continued by aircraft from the Search and Rescue unit at Greenwood, Nova Scotia. One plane from Summerside which was taken part in the search yesterday developed mechanical trouble with its landing wheels which refused to be drawn up, and this plane was recalled to its Summerside base.
