perfect one, if ever—you were in your second year then, too young to know anything about it or listen to it as we did by radio, and then... She nodded, stars in her blue eyes. "I know what comes next: 'And they lived happily ever after!'"

"Yes, dear," we agreed "they are—and will continue to 'live happily ever after' just like a story-book, 'Princess and Prince'."

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night...

A Feature for Every Friday Among The Farmers Federation Of Agriculture News

The Last Plowman At this time of the year our memory goes back to verses of an old school teacher: "Where the last plowman follows still his row, turning black furrows through the whitening fields." Plowing is best done earlier in the season where soil temperature has not fallen below 40 degrees, the point at which the rotting of the sod ceases. The chief advantage in plowing at this time of the year is mainly time saving for next spring. For maximum grain crops it would appear that early plowing plus thorough fall cultivation and doing away with the necessity of too deep cultivation in the spring tends to improve grain yields and personal pride is costing him. For the second reason much can be said on both sides but surely the consuming public fighting the battle of the budget has no particular responsibility to support inefficient service. The statement is of course made, that agriculture is not consistent in its stand on price fixing and is also an offender itself. We would point out, however, the following differences: 1. The so-called price fixing asked for and received by farmers on farm products is not price fixing at profit protecting levels, but price support at minimum or "stop-loss" levels. 2. The price support program on farm products is developed by public authority under public legislation, or by a Board named by public authority. In short, it is price arranging in public under public supervision.

Such so-called price fixing is therefore, done in the public knowledge and with opportunity for public representation. Price fixing practiced by business under the resale price maintenance system is entirely a private affair, without access by the public, or by public authority to the process. Agriculture will support the free enterprise system but it must be free and it must be enterprising, not monopolistic or restrictive.

Potato Prices Potato prices today stand for this time of the year, at their highest level for a number of years. In Maine, prices are almost exactly double those at this time last year and over 2000 cars of the Maine crop have been moved to date, compared with about 800 for last year.

An orderly movement of the crop by our growers would appear to be a sound practice rather than gambling on peak prices which if they materialize are apt to be followed during the same season by valley prices.

Census Returns While the census returns indicate an overall increase in population for the Province, they also prove that our rural population is going down. King's County has suffered the most, losing in the last ten years, approximately 2000 rural people or the population equivalent of about twenty school districts or an average of two school districts per year. This trend if continued for seventy-five years would eliminate the entire rural population. King's County did not benefit from the expenditure of public money associated with war time development. Its people in order to share in Canadian wartime and post-war industrial development were forced to leave the County.

However, the future of the County is not without hope. Its agriculture is still sound, its fisheries capable of development, and its woodlands with judicious management capable of providing substantial revenue for years to come. Eventually Georgetown, the Island's best winter port will be developed and become a point from which traffic will depart for Cape Breton and Nova Scotia.

Guns And Butter The F.A.O. (Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations) is concerned that in the race for building up armaments that sight may be lost in many countries of the necessity of increasing food production. The race for defense and rearmament may tighten the world's hunger belt to the danger notch. Certainly, should Canada in the immediate future become involved in large scale military operations the provision of food for the civilian population and the armed forces could become a major problem. In 1939 our food baskets were full—today many of them are depleted.

Mutual Fire Insurance The Exchequer Court of Canada has decided that Mutual Fire Insurance Companies must pay income tax on revenue placed in reserve account. While not pretending to be a legal authority or daring to question the fairness of the judgment we do find it a little difficult to understand how a group of individuals formed into an Association for the purpose of protecting themselves mutually against individual losses can make a profit out of the operation. Reserve funds are set up for no other purpose but to reimburse the members for their losses. They, therefore, in our opinion rightly belong to the members and not to the Company.

Possibly our Mutual Fire Insurance Companies could re-examine their method of organization with a view to adjustments designed to protect the position of the members and the future of the Companies.

Royal Visitors The demonstration of loyalty and indication of affection for our Royal Visitors showed very conclusively that while the Sovereignty of England may be a very remote and intangible thing that the British Commonwealth of Nations is firmly cemented and bonded together by the regard and esteem held for Royalty in general and in particular for the young couple who will someday share the throne of an Empire on which the sun is forever rising.

Today, since early morning hundreds of cars have been filling their allotted parking spaces on the outskirts of the town. Excited farm families started their morning chores and journey to see Her Royal Highness and her husband the Duke of Edinburgh long before most Charlottetonians were awake.

They have a special interest in seeing her. Her father, King George VI, a farmer who owns one of the finest herds of purebred cattle in England, has advanced scientific farming methods in Great Britain to the extent that the Royal estates at Sandringham and Windsor are world models in agricultural efficiency. Today, if Her Highness should ask at the Experimental Station of P. E. I.'s methods in farming, the reply will in all probability find its way to her father. His Majesty King George VI.

Farm Forum Farm organizations have become of such importance to agriculture in Canada that prosperity of the industry is dependent on them. But in order to function properly these organizations must have strong and experienced leaders. Farm Forums provide a splendid means of procuring experience in leadership, as in many sections it is customary to change leaders from one meeting to another, thus giving each member an opportunity for experience in taking charge of a meeting.

Although Farm Forum has been functioning in Canada for eleven years, there are yet many of our farming districts that have never been organized. This is unfortunate as many worthwhile community projects have been born at these small group meetings. It is an easy matter to start a Forum. Any agricultural representative, fieldman or person who is familiar with Farm Forum practices, would gladly assist and direct in organizing.

Farm Forum is the foundation for better farm organizations and better farm organizations mean more prosperity for the agricultural industry, which in turn gives the farmers of this country a higher standard of living. We wish each and every group across Canada a successful season.

The Maritime Royal At the Maritime Winter Fair, Island exhibitors showed conclusively that they could hold their own with the best of the Maritimes can produce. The prime purpose of the Fair is to show what Maritime agriculture can do and too much emphasis should not perhaps be placed on provincial superiority in any particular field. The Fair is a valuable means of acquainting farmers with their Maritime neighbors and of developing appreciation for the achievements of others. King's County potato growers in winning the championship three years in succession have demonstrated that King's County soil and King's County selection is a factor to be reckoned with.

Federation Meetings On next Monday some fifty Federation directors will meet in Charlottetown for consideration of policies to be discussed at the annual meetings of the County Organizations coming up later this month.
