THE DAILY EXAMINER.
AUGUST 9, 1882.
Notes of a Naturalist.
"Ye field flowers! the gardens eclipse you," 'tis true.
Yet, wildlings of nature, I dole upon you."
The fair spring flowers are now all gone, and the brighter blossoms of summer fill their place. When the Violet, with its ivory cup filled to the brim with perfume, came with the suns of May, we thought it the fairest gift that heaven could bestow on a weeping world. Then came the blue violet, Viola orata, of which Byron sings:
The sweetness of the violets deep blue eyes,
Kissed by the breath of heaven, seems borrowed from the skies.
If you are fond of violets, you may still, perhaps, find a few on some cool, damp place. Where the deep shadows of birches and alders, bury the crystal of the brook, there is a little grassy plot always moistened with the spattered dew of the cascade. Here the blue violet may still be found, blooming sweetly in the shade, while the silent thrush comes to dip his bill in the clear cool fountain.
But the real summer flowers are out in the full sunshine. How the rich pastures flash with golden buttercups! There are two kinds, the tall Ranunculus acris with lacerated leaves; and the low, creeping Ranunculus repens. In the tall grass, of the meadows, too, the fair blue-eyed grass with its pure ultramarine blossom, is found; also the Prunella thick purple spike of labiate flowers; and the little Skull-cap; and the tall Germander; and the climbing Vetch with a profusion of blue, thick clustering racemes. The little speedwell, Veronica agrestis, hides in the sward, so rich in minute, pearly blossoms that it spangles the grass, like showers of dew; and the larger V. officinalis, with blue flowers, which grow so abundantly by the highway side.
Here we have our representatives of the great Orchid family—those grand beauties of the tropical forests. Ours are small, of course, but interesting. The ladies tresses (Neottia cornuta) grows eight inches high, and has a large spike of spirally arranged, recurved flowers, which emit a pleasant perfume, often scenting the whole meadow, as the mower goes through the grass. The Habenaria grows two feet high, with a great spike of whitish, orchid flowers with frilled lips.
Our most beautiful orchid, however, Cypripedium spectabile, is found under the shade of the beechwood. It has a large, bright purple flower, and beautiful, smooth, ribbed leaves. Here, under the shade of the whispering, leafy arches, where the olive thrush never ceases the rippling music of its lay, there are some lovely floral gems.
The Pyrola uniflora, with its round, evergreen leaves, and large, single blossom, is a sweetly scented treasure. Pyrola rotundifolia has a spike of similar blossoms, just as fragrant.
The sweet little pink bells of the Linnaea are found here, too. The plant has a trailing stem, which spreads delicate tendrils of evergreen leaves over the moss; and, even in autumn and winter, its freshness is pleasing. But now its profusion of sweet-scented, delicate little flowers, two on every tiny stalk, makes it a perfumed treasure of the woodland. Here, also, are the Neottia tortilis, the Twa-blade, the Dragons claw, and the curious, colorless, Dutchman's pipe.
The pale Andromeda, the flashing Rhodora, the Ledum, and the Wortleberry flowers are gone; but the Kalmia makes up for them all. How it ornaments the dusty highway side, and spreads a blush of beauty over the rude barrens! We are so accustomed to this plant that we think little of it. But its flowers are really pretty, and they have some peculiarities of structure worth studying, and which Darwin made use of, in his most interesting investigations regarding plant fertilization.
The Willow herbs are now in full bloom, waving their purple pikes above the fence tops. They grow best where a wood fire has run; and in such a situation we have seen acres in extent one blaze of delicate purple bloom.
Let us leave the wood land now, and seek some neglected border where the wild roses grow. Down by the shore will be the best place. The fresh breeze and the beauty of the blue wave invite us there. As we go through the meadow, and the pasture, the tiny song of the chip sparrow runs everywhere through the grass; and some bob-tailed fledglings flutter in our path. The clear whistle of the song sparrow rings over the fields, to tell us how love lives in this world. The plover flies away with strong wing, and loud wailing cry, in sympathy with the lonely spirit of nature. How those graceful swallows sweep and circle through the clear heaven, in evolutions which make even its arch look more beautiful! What a glory that summer sky is, with its pure white clouds! You peer into its loveliness, till you think of things above and beyond.
There is a field of Irises by the pond, a sea of bloom of deeper ultramarine than the sky; and the great, delicate, pick-stained bells of the Convallaria float from their climbing tendrils, on the fence top, quivering in the sunny breeze.
Here is where the wild roses grow. They make a thicket clear across the foot of the field. It is a perfect billowy swell of bloom, every rippling spray a flashing beauty of carmine and gold.
B.
A PECULIAR cattle disease is raging at Lynn, a little settlement near Five Islands, Colchester County, N. S. The animals affected lose the use of their limbs. Several cows have been shot to put them out of their misery. It is reported that over 20 cattle have perished. The attention of the Minister of Agriculture is to be called to the matter.

Egyptian War Notes.
AUSTRIA AND HER GAME.
Austria is again trying on the double-shuffle trick. She evidently thinks England has no friends. She is, therefore, determined not to be on her side, and yet not to oppose her openly, for fear of awkward eventualities. All she can do by insinuation and innuendo she does. For instance, the Vienna Fremdenblatt says:—
"The proposal to establish a European protection of the Suez Canal will be to a certain extent the test of the honesty of England's intentions. If England should refuse to concur in the proposal the existing distrust will not be unwarranted."
As England, by representative, has not at once given in her adhesion to the proposal as formulated by Italy regarding the protectorate to be established over the Suez Canal, but, like France, has consulted the Cabinet, this "Austrian distrust" will probably be increased.

ARAB'S INTRIGUES.
There is said to be the best of evidence to show that Arabi is negotiating with the Palace at Constantinople about a parallel action between his own and the Turkish troops. It is said that he proposes that the Turks shall occupy Cairo, while he will remove to some central portion in the Delta provided the Turks promise not to attack his rear.
PRUSSIAN OFFICERS FOR TURKEY.
A number of Prussian officers have entered the Turkish army under a contract that is to run for a term of three years, with provisions for a renewal. One of the officers is a Colonel, who takes the office of Brigadier General with a salary of 30,000 francs. The others are to be Colonels in the Ottoman service, and will receive a salary of 23,000 francs. In addition to this, all are to get the usual rations and other allowances given to Turkish officers of like rank. In case of disability for service a pension of one-third of the active salary is to be given, and in case of death, a pension of one-half the salary is to go to the widow and children. The officers, moreover, though obliged to wear the Turkish military uniform, will not be required to renounce their allegiance to Prussia. They are to continue subjects of the Prussian Government, and members of the Prussian army. Both the Turkish and Prussian Governments assent to this. The salaries and pensions are to be paid in gold by the Ottoman Bank.

THE PATRIARCH OF ALEXANDRIA.
The New York Churchman learns that Sophronius, the venerable Patriarch of Alexandria, has, amid the trying scenes which have lately taken place in Alexandria, shown great heroism. It was believed by many that his life was endangered from Moslem fanaticism, and he was urged to withdraw. But he felt that, at such a time, his place was with his flock, and although fourscore years old, he has been diligent in encouraging those who were threatened, and succoring those who were oppressed.

A New Business.
A new business, says an exchange, has apparently opened up in Washington, and we may expect to see its operations extended to other countries before long. We have had the lobbyist, and the political contract broker; may we not gather in, some of these days, the office procurer? It seems in Washington the business is a flourishing one. The other morning one of the daily papers contained several notices, of which the following are samples:—
WANTED.—Will pay to any one procuring me employment under the Government or otherwise, paying $1200 annually or more or less, percentage in proportion to salary received, payable monthly. Address M. H. T. Star office.
WANTED.—I will pay $100 to any one securing me a position paying $60 a month in any of the departments. Address in confidence, C. H., City Post Office.
WANTED.—A pensioner will pay for one year $20 per month for a situation in any of the departments that will pay $60 per month. Address in strict confidence, R. D., City Post Office.
WANTED.—A competent young lady who desires a position in one of the departments, will give one half of salary to any person securing her the same. Address Miss Gussie M., City Post Office.

MACK'S MAGNETIC MEDICINE is a positive remedy for nervous exhaustion and all weaknesses of the generative organs in both sexes, sold in Charlottetown by Apothecaries Hall Co. See advertisement in another column.

DENNIS DINEEY, farmer of Lower Lachue, intends to start the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to animals for having imported sparrows. This year alone he declares they have already eaten up thirty acres of barley, and destroyed his potatoes and early vegetables. He estimates the sparrows on his land at 5,000.

JAMES SLAUGHTER, North-West, says he was almost fatally injured by the fall of a tree. After doctors gave him up, Minard's Liniment, used externally and internally, cured him.
