THE HAND In one of his essays A. K. H. Boyd tells of going one morning to the tomb cemetery and sitting by the tombstone of the minister who had been one of his predecessors in the congregation of that community, but who had been dead fifty years. He thought of the sixty years during which that good man had served that flock. "With Mr. Boyd that morning was a little girl of four years. After playing among the stones and graves the child returned and as she saw Mr. Boyd's hand on the flat stone she placed her little chubby hand beside his and said, "Was your hand ever as small as mine?" He looked at his own, now wrinkled and broad, because he had worked in a mill before he went to college. "Yes," he said, somewhat sadly, "it was once small, and soft like yours. Then he thought of three hands near each other — his own, the little child's, and several yards under ground that of the old minister who had lain there all these years. He thought of the work that latter hand had done, "baptized children, opened doors, closed doors of my house, written many sermons, turned over the pages of the Bible which I now use, paid money and at times received it." The question from the little questioner touched Boyd and caused him to realize what changes time brings. Then he wrote his essay on Growing Old.

S. of the Brookfield Charge was held at the home of Carl MacLeod, Hunter River, on November 5th. The theme for the meeting was "Does It Matter What We Believe." The meeting opened with the call to worship, Psalm 103: 1-5 by the leader, Randolph Nicholson, followed by singing "My Faith Looks Up To Thee". The Scripture lesson, John 4: 3-14 was read by Donald MacInnis. The leader then led in prayer, and "O For A Heart To Praise My God" was sung. Exposition of the theme was given by the leader, followed by a discussion. The devotional period closed with the singing of "More Love To Thee", followed by the Lord's Prayer in unison. The president presided over the business portion of the meeting. Due to the absence of the secretary, Kaye Nicholson was appointed secretary for the meeting. The next meeting is to be held at the home of Randolph Nicholson.

LITERATURE AND LIFE

There is a story in the Bible about that strange character Absalom. We recall how his conduct broke his father's heart, and how bitter were the tears David shed for him — "Would God I had died for thee, Absalom, my son, my son!" Thirty centuries have not dried those tears. The story is about a man named Absalom had erected in the king's dale. It was to keep his memory green and the Bible says it was called "Absalom's Place". The word for place is the same as that for hand, and the reading might be, it is called Absalom's Hand. We often see the figure of a hand indicating which road to take — to guide travellers. Many years ago in Cape Breton after a big snow storm, when a man was lost, Spring sun melted the snow and there was seen a black object sticking up through the snow which was left of that storm. The presumption was, as I recall reading about it, that the man had been drinking. The black hand seemed to say—Look, what drink did to me. Like the sign by the roadside it tried to point the way, calling the travellers to take the right road. When Jesus would convince doubting Thomas as to his identity he showed him his hands pierced as they were, and one of the most touching incidents in Saint Paul's life is where he, at Ephesus taking farewell of his kirk session, in order to prove his unselfishness, held up his hands and said "these hands have ministered to my necessities and to those who were with me." (Acts 20:34). These words from an anonymous writer may form a fitting close. As one who knows his friend will come, yet none the less Is ever busy with his wonted toil As the slow hours roll onward, calling the travellers to the right. The welcome step within the corridor And the door opens and the friends clasp hands, And are at one forever; so I work At the sore tattered tapestry of life Or which we know nor origin nor end.
