Heroism in Death.

DEATH OF DR. WHITMAN.

I have often been struck at the heroism displayed and the fortitude manifested by the rough men of the mountains in the presence of danger and of death. They meet death as they have many a time met disappointment and defeat in digging for mineral. Pistols may snap, and revolvers fire, but if they think it their duty to go in, they go, regardless of consequences. The Utes or Apaches may be on the war path, but the old miner will sleep peacefully under the very shadow of their wigwams. The cold sweat may be standing on the brow, and the hand of death feeling for the heart-strings, but even then the old miner will be giving directions about his little effects until the dumb lips refuse any more to move. I once saw a young doctor die under the shadow of the silent hills. He was only twenty-six years old. Jilted in a love affair in his native Alabama, he abandoned his home, his practice and his friends, for a rough life among the rougher mountains of Colorado. Here he dropped his lance and pickaxe, and took up the pick and the spade. Strong, manly and tender-hearted, he was beloved and admired by all who had the pleasure of knowing him. But he fell ill, very ill, far away from his rude cabin home. Quite often in a new country among these untravelled canons, the poor miner has to move away, miles and miles, into the very heart of the mountains. For weeks, maybe, he will be there alone either hunting for new claims or opening up ones that have already been staked, or trying to ravish gold or silver from the unwilling rocks. There you will find him busy at work, away down in the awful gorge, where but a few hours in the day the rays of the sun can penetrate his cheerless abode—so silent that every sound appears to be the whisperings of the Almighty, so rugged and terrible that every crevice and cliff appears to be the chiseling of the Maker of the Universe. The merry song of the tiny bird as it rests its little feet on the tender limb is his only music by day. The roar of the lion, the growl of the bear, and the bark of the wolf by night, warn him that a blazing fire is necessary to keep these monsters away from his lonely tent. The stars only stand sentinel above him. As the first ray of the golden morn' comes skipping over the mountains, he will be found hammering away on the granite rock toiling on, toiling alone, in search of the metal where the finger of God had placed it in the dawn of creation. It was in a place like this that sickness seized my young friend in the summer of 1882. Deprived of the comforts of home without medicine, care, attendance or proper food, he began rapidly to decline. One day a miner came along and found him stretched on the cold ground, one blanket under and two over him, and half delirious with fever. He decided to get him down to the nearest town, where a bed, food, and a doctor could be had. A mattress was then fastened to two poles, and on this the sick man was carried up the rugged mountains' side and down their rugged cliffs again—over boulder and slide rock and fallen timber, under a broiling sun. With parched lips, and teeth set and clenched fists he bore up against his pains. "Carry me down, boys," he would say; "if you can do it quick I can stand it out." After nearly two days of hard toiling, they reached the village in safety. But it was too late. The patient's unflinching heroism was not a match for the king of terrors. The effort was too great for his wasted strength and the "grim monarch of the tomb" began to draw his thin lips upon his firmly set teeth. The work was nearly done—the battle almost over—but he could not be persuaded that his end was near. "Boys," he would say, "it's a hard fight, and I may win yet. I have more sand left yet." But in spite of all his courage and persistence, he rapidly sank lower and lower. When the death-rattle could be heard in his throat, and he felt that the "vital spark" had all but flown, he turned to his comrades and said: "My dear fellows, I guess I have to die. Death is too much for me. I would like to live longer; but I am not afraid to die. So far as I am concerned myself, I am satisfied; but it will kill my poor old father. Tell him I died at my post, and held out as long as I could. For his sake I would like to live; but God's will be done." Then placing his finger upon his pulse, he remarked, "Sink, sink, sink; but it takes a long time to wear a fellow out. If I had the strength now I had when I left the mountains, I believe I could weather it out; but it's gone now, boys. I wish it was over, for I am tired, tired, and I want rest. Then, all of a sudden, he rolled up his eyes, and clenched his teeth, but still feeling his pulse, said: "Just gone, boys. It will soon be over. Good bye. God bless you all." And his great soul winged its way far beyond the sun and the stars—I believe to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb through the rolling cycles of eternity. F.

The Elections in Germany.

A Berlin despatch says that in all the great towns where the Catholics do not predominate the elections have resulted in favour of the Liberals. The Liberals gain 30 votes in the Diet from the Conservatives. In several new districts in the vicinity of Berlin and Potsdam the Conservatives are victorious. No party will have a majority in the new Chamber. In order to obtain a majority it would be necessary for the Government to enter into an alliance with the Clericals and Conservatives.

The State of Ireland.

Mr. Trevelyan, Chief Secretary for Ireland, speaking at Selkirk, Scotland, a short time ago, said the resident magistrates of Ireland in their last reports were singularly unanimous in stating that the relations between landlord and tenant was improving, and that rents were being fairly paid while intimidation was decreasing. Another subject for thankfulness, said Mr. Trevelyan, is the fact that for nearly six months since, there has been no collision between the constabulary and people in the Irish provinces.

Arctic Expedition in Danger.

From the report of the commander of the steamer Louise, a trading vessel which endeavored to reach the mouth of the Yenisei river with the Dutch Arctic expedition ship Varna, it is considered that both Arctic expeditions are in a dangerous position, as both are beset with ice in the Kara sea, 80 miles from the continent. The Louise endeavored to assist them for two days, but fearing to be beset in a similar manner effected her escape, on September 22nd. If the vessels are not free by this time they will have to winter in the moving pack.

Protection in Russia.

Russians are finding every day that in order to become a highly civilized and prosperous nation it is necessary to do something besides growing wheat. Accordingly fresh demands are being constantly put forward for protection to manufacturing industries. To-day the cotton manufacturers are moving for a further advance of the duties on imported cotton goods in order to check foreign competition. The Russians are learning the importance of a home market for their grain, which now meets with a severe competition in England from American-grown wheat, and protection is the popular cry.

A Big Farm.

The mammoth farm of the North-West is owned and operated by the Qu'Appelle Valley Farming Company. It comprises a tract ten miles square, which after deducting the Hudson Bay Company's sections and the sections allotted for school purposes, leaves a fifty-six thousand acre farm, the largest farm in the world, owned by one company in one block. The land is situated on the old trail from Winnipeg to Fort Qu'Appelle, and the main buildings are just twenty-two miles in an almost direct line south of the Fort. The C. P. R. runs through the centre of his valuable tract, which is in reality one of the "gold-edged" pieces of the North West, and a station to be known by the name of Indian Head is located near the centre. Here an interesting village is rapidly springing up. In taking up this land the Company entered into an agreement with the Government which it is presumed they intend and will be required to adhere to faithfully. They agreed to pay the Government $1.25 per acre and to break 4,000 acres every year for five years—or in all twenty thousand acres. In addition to this the Company binds itself, under penalty of forfeiture of the purchase money, to place each year within the tract as tenants at least fifty families, and to spend within the five years $600,000 in improvements and in working the farm. So far the work has been pushed vigorously; the Company evidently mean business, and having been generously dealt with by the Government, will avail themselves of all the advantages to make the undertaking a profitable one. Major Bell, who has sole management of the farm, originally came from Brockville. He was one of the proprietors of the noted Bell-Kelso farm in Minnesota, where he obtained the experience he possesses, and which fits him to operate an enterprise so vast. Having sold his Minnesota interest, he will devote his entire attention to the farm at Qu'Appelle, which, by the way, is a scheme of his own suggestion.

THE ONTARIO ELECTIONS.—Says the Toronto Mail:—

In East Simcoe in 1879 the Grit majority was 318; on Wednesday the Grit majority in the same constituency reached but 220. In South Waterloo in 1879 the Grit majority was 428; in the constituency on Wednesday it was under 400. In West Hastings in 1880 (when the last local election took place there) the Conservative majority was 149; on Wednesday Mr. Rose rolled up a majority of 256. In these three constituencies the Conservatives have gained over 200 votes, or more than enough to turn the tide in their favour in the other constituencies.

Railway Statistics.

The railroad mileage of the United States is greater than that of all Europe. On January 1st last, there were in the former 104,800 miles of railroad, against 107,306 miles in Europe, but already this year the United States has constructed 7,600 miles, bringing the total mileage of the country up to 112,400 miles. In Great Britain the railway mileage is 18,157 miles, or one mile of road to every 1,939 of the population, while the United States has a mile of road for every 490 of population.

There has been a notable increase in the earnings of American railways since the commencement of the year. The gross increase to the 1st September, $26,770,447, was made on an extended mileage equal to ten per cent., but the increase in the earnings was fourteen per cent. The average earnings per mile were $623, against $509 for the corresponding part of 1881.
