ON AIR FORCE DAY

Saturday, June 8, the RCAF staged its 11th annual Air Force Day, marking the occasion with ground and aerial demonstrations at 21 stations across Canada. Aircraft shown here feature performers in the RCAF's year round work among those which will hold the spotlight as the Air Force goes "on display".

TOP LEFT is the P2V-7 maritime reconnaissance Neptune, latest aircraft to enter squadron service with the RCAF. Carrying a half of electronic detection gear, this sub hunter-killer doubles for minelaying and torpedo bombing duties.

The highly-maneuvrable T-33 jet trainer at UPPER RIGHT, a familiar sight at most flying stations across Canada, will play a large part in the June 8 displays. This is the aircraft used to train Canadian and NATO student pilots.

Air Transport Command's "Flying Boxcar," the aircraft which won headlines in the U.N. airlift to Egypt, displays its size and carrying power at LOWER LEFT. Through its yawning cargo doors, a fire truck rolls into the pod-type fuselage.

Star of the Air Force Day show, LOWER RIGHT, will be the RCAF's CF-100 long-range interceptor, the all-weather aircraft which guards North America's aerial approaches against aggression. Here the blunt nose of the big all-weather fighter makes a striking picture as the crew climbs aboard.

Outlines Problems In Modern Town Planning

By JACK VAN DUSEN
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP) — Backyard planting space will have to give way to community recreation areas in cities of the future, says community planning specialist Eric Beecroft.

And the cities themselves will have to be higher and less sprawling to conserve valuable farm land on which to feed the world's greater population.

Mr. Beecroft, national director of the 3,000-member community planning association of Canada, says people living in today's suburbs have concentrated too much on personal property. Already they were feeling the effects of the lack of forest in not setting aside enough land for public recreation.

CITES TORONTO

The 53-year-old economist and housing expert says Toronto is an example of a modern city eating up too much arable land.

"Toronto will be twice as big in population in 1980 but, if the present uncontrolled growth continues, it may be three times as big in area," he says.

"Think of what this means in the cost of underground utilities, rights of way, pavement, other utilities and transportation.

"Think of how it will affect the journey to work, which already is one of the most serious problems of urban living."

OTHERS SIMILAR

Toronto isn't alone. Vancouver and Montreal suffer from the same growing pains.

The only solution, says Mr. Beecroft, is controlled and planned

Cities will have to have taller multiple dwellings, intermingled with row housing and one-family units, taking advantage as much as possible of greenery and trees to give an air of spaciousness without using up all the arable land.

"At the present rate of growth a large part of the arable land in British Columbia will be turned over to industry and residential development. The same thing is happening all around Toronto and Montreal where thousands of acres of highly-productive soil are being taken out of production every year.

"When we take land from agriculture we should know why we are doing it and be sure there are no alternatives."

Mr. Beecroft advocates blending row housing with single family units and apartment buildings because "we know now how drab our urban landscape can be with standard-sized lots and individual houses." The blend of the three types will give communities a "more satisfying kind of environment—socially and aesthetically."

The community planning association was formed in 1949 to "foster public understanding of and participation in community planning in Canada."

Mr. Beecroft, a native of Toronto and an economist with the World Bank for seven years, became director in 1954. He coordinates the activities of the regional offices in every province and distributes literature on community planning, including two magazines —The Review, a quarterly, and The News, a bi-monthly.

Reunion Will Bring Veteran To Canada Again

BELLEVILLE (CP) — A Canadian soldier, who went overseas during the First World War and stayed in Europe after he married a Belgian girl, is returning to Canada in September to attend the annual reunion of his battalion at Oshawa.

After 37 years in Europe, 70-year-old CSM Robert Logue, formerly of Foxboro, Ont., returns to Canada through the efforts of comrades who served with him in the 21st battalion.

He joined the 38th battalion of the Canadian Expeditionary Force in Belleville in January, 1915, and left for overseas in May the same year.

Transferred to the 21st battalion, his qualities of leadership earned him the rank of CSM and his courage under fire won him the Military Medal and the Distinguished Conduct Medal.

When the war ended Logue met and married a Belgian girl and they made their home in the village of Ham-sur-Sambre. They have lived there ever since, the Canadian making a brief visit to Canada in 1920.

When Hitler overran Belgium in 1940 the Germans ransacked Logue's home and found his Canadian medals and decorations. Taken prisoner, he was put to work in a labor battalion until the end of the war.

His desire to see Canada again reached the ears of a former comrade in his battalion now living in the United States who set the wheels in motion to bring Logue back to Canada.
