
doesn't mean, and he knows quite a bit about hard days.

In spite of his age, this child has overcome a great deal. He suffers from chronic Asthma. Last year, he spent 14 weeks in the hospital. That works out 98 days: a very large part of a small child's life. Though life may look easy for those around us, (especially for kids), we never really know until we see the whole picture.

The best part of the story is that this little cloud has a big silver lining. Through it all, Joshua has remained what he is, and what he should be: a child.

A Stroll Along The Beach

The ocean and the sky are twins.
A gentle pink of peace.
The sun is leaving,
It's warmth embraces us good night.

We walk along the shore
in silence, in dreams.
The wind caresses our bodies,
the cold sand kisses our flesh,
a blue fire, cold desire.

The twins, no longer pink, play with black.
The moon gives us light,
with shadows that glide on ocean,
while the sea protects the land.

A beautiful evening, but sad.
When men and women stroll in love,
I am alone
with my companion,
my friend.

The Poem By Leah Clyburn

the poem
as everything in life,
has it's share of duties.

The bumble bee makes honey;
the sheep gives us wool;
death balances the population;
and the poem,
it gives us a remedy
for bursting frustration or depression.
As the poet's emotions are slowly poured in the form of words.
It is courage to say things he is too scared to say verbally.

The poem,
it goes through some undeserving punishments.
Innocent children are abused;
babies starve in foreign nations;
the elderly are everywhere abused;
and the poem,
it has criticizing editors who pull apart
its very limbs,
and naive students who fail to reveal its message.

And then, the poem,
when it is asked,
"exactly what is your meaning?"
it simply bows its head and says,
"if this you ask,
then I have no meaning."
