Gov't Reported Prepared For Flag Issue Compromise

By JAMES NELSON

OTTAWA (CP)—The government is ready to accept major compromises in its proposal for a national flag for Canada, it was learned here.

Overtures already have been made to backbench opposition MPs by at least one government supporter for designs described as more closely resembling the Red Ensign than the maple leaf now proposed by the government.

A basic plank of the government's flag platform, however, still is that there should be a national flag for Canada that cannot be confused with the flag of any other country.

This rules out any adaptation of the Red Ensign, which is similar to the flags of a number of Commonwealth countries and British colonies and is based on the British merchant marine flag—the Union Jack in one corner on a field of red.

But an adaptation of the Red Ensign—itself a variation of the so-called blue ensign — might be acceptable to the government as a flag representing Canada's loyalty to the Queen and membership in the Commonwealth.

PROPOSITION ADVANCED

At least, this proposition has been advanced privately and informally to the Conservatives by a prominent Liberal.

As a flag for Canada's national identity, apart altogether from its Queen and Commonwealth connection, one of the flag designs tentatively suggested by Liberal go-betweens in their private meetings with opposition supporters is a radical variation of the maple leaf flag.

The background would be pale blue—similar to the color of the United Nations' flag and a shade that also appears in the flags of a number of other countries with long histories of independence.

The overlaying symbol would be either one or three maple leafs in scarlet red.

Highest government authorities are said to favor this flag even over the maple leaf design on a white background and with blue bars presented to Parliament by Prime Minister Pearson. They are reported now to be ready to adopt it over the advice of experts in heraldry.

GOVT. HAS PROBLEM

The main problem said to be confronting the government and its Liberal supporters is having the compromise introduced in the Commons if it is acceptable to the House generally.

The government does not want to appear to be giving away to opposition pressure against the original maple leaf design but is reported ready to adopt almost any variation which would be acceptable as compromise.

Along with the maple leaf flag, the government's original proposal was that the Union Jack should be recognized as the Queen and Commonwealth symbol.

The government's position is reported to be the Queen and Commonwealth flag need not be recognized as an official flag of any other country or of the Commonwealth but merely be recognized as Canada's symbol of loyalty to the Queen and membership in the Commonwealth.

In this context, one of the suggestions made privately by a government representative is that the Queen and Commonwealth flag for Canada consist of the Union Jack in the upper quarter next to the staff on a field of deep blue, with a Canadian device on the fly.

In the Red Ensign, the device on the fly is a Canadian shield; three maple leaves surmounted by the lions of England, the lion rampant of Scotland, the harp of Ireland and the fleur-de-lis of France.

Australia and New Zealand already have blue ensigns as the basis for their national flags — Australia with white stars representing the southern heavens, and New Zealand with four red stars.

The thinking here is that a flag representing Canada's Queen and Commonwealth connection based on the blue ensign would tie in neatly with the flags already flown by two other senior Commonwealth countries.

Wider Market Outlook Seen For Canadian Forestry Items

OTTAWA (CP) — There's a tremendous world demand for forest products and it's time the Canadian forest industry got out of the "nice, comfortable rut" of reliance on American markets, Alvin Hamilton said in the Commons.

The former Conservative resources minister said Canada is missing the boat and that he is appalled how little has been done to meet the challenge.

Mr. Hamilton, who recently visited Communist China, said there is a huge market there for Canadian forest products, especially paper.

Canada could develop 20 to 30 new paper mills in the next five to 10 years if the forest industry were "taken out of the kitchen."

Speaking in a debate on the $90,469,000 appropriation for the forestry department, Mr. Hamilton urged Forestry Minister Sauve to use all his diplomacy and charm to make the provinces and the industry aware of the opportunities.

Forest resources came under provincial jurisdiction but Mr. Sauve had all the prestige of a federal minister and could dangle markets before the provinces and the forest industry.

Mr. Sauve, who spoke earlier, said it is important for his department to work out with the provinces and universities the future course of forest research.

He would attempt to establish closer co-operation among the provinces in the fighting of forest fires.

Douglas Fisher (NDP — Port Arthur) said Mr. Sauve had spoken as if he were in charge of nothing more than a bureaucracy. The minister was a man of energy, education and imagination and should seize the opportunities of his portfolio.

Federal leadership was desperately needed on forestry problems.

Mr. Fisher said Canada's "Indian problem" should be solved through a forestry development program.

By organizing a program whereby Indians could get some kind of economic confidence" through the use of the forests, the plight of many reserves would be eased, and the forest industry would be further developed.

OLD PHONES POSE PROBLEM

TORONTO (CP)—Leif Bolhoel, a Danish importer arriving here with 3,000 French antique telephones, has been presented with a problem by the Bell Telephone Company.

While Bell doesn't exactly forbid selling the phones—some of them plated with 23-carat gold and costing between $90 to $200 each—it won't hook them up. And if a servicemen spots one in service he'll ask that it be taken out.

Mr. Bolhoel said he has offered to let Bell distribute the phones, but the company hasn't returned his call.

"I don't blame them for not wanting them used otherwise —for every telephone I sell they lose money in renting telephones," he said.

A spokesman for Bell Telephone said the company must own all equipment on its lines to "ensure quality control and adaptibility to technological changes."

If it discovers an antique phone in use it can order it removed under the Ontario Telephone Act and possibly cut off service to any violator.

Mr. Bolhoel plans to sell the phones wholesale to retail stores in time for Christmas sales.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2♠	Pass	3♥	Pass
3♠	Pass	4♠	Pass
4♠	Pass	4NT	Pass
5♦	Pass	6NT

Opening lead — six of diamonds.

It is hard to believe some of the stories you hear about hands played in championship tournaments, but, believe it or not, this actually occurred in the European championships played last year in Baden-Baden.

France was playing Italy on Bridgerama when this deal occurred. The audience was amazed, as well as amused, when the French North-South pair, due to a mix-up in the bidding, arrived at a final contract of six notrump.

A diamond was led, and North, who was declarer, suffered through the ordeal of seeing eight spade tricks go down the drain because he had no way of reaching dummy. He eventually went down five in six notrump for a loss of 250 points.

But, strangely enough, the French team gained on the deal when an Italian pair, holding the North-South cards, bid as follows at the second table:

South	West	North	East
1♠	Pass	3♣	Pass
3NT	Pass	4♥	Pass
4NT	Pass	5♣	Pass
6♠	Pass	Pass	Dbl.

As usual, the Italians were using a highly artificial system. Apparently, South's hand called for a diamond bid, though he was void of diamonds, instead of a spade bid, wit's eight solid spade tricks.

What the rest of the bids meant I don't really know, but South mentioned spades for the first time in the six level. It is difficult to criticize the bidding that led the Italian pair to six spades, especially since the contract finally reached was entirely sound and would normally have been made.

However, in this case, the Italians were somewhat unlucky. West led a club. East ruffed and returned a heart. West took the ace and gave East another club ruff, and the result was that the Italian South went down two redoubled — 600 points. France gained 350 points on the deal.
