RACE FOR A BRIDE.

It was in those days when Sharp's Island, which divides the mouth of the Choptank and the Chesapeake Bay, was the site of three large farms of more than four hundred acres. But the ceaseless roll of the tides of the bay and river on the two sides and the numerous ice gorges of the northern rivers of the bay have caused the island to be worn away to a mere shadow of its former self.

The light house, which is now more than a half mile away from the northern end of the island, was then on solid ground, one hundred or two hundred yards from the water. But the Choptank has not been changed.

It is still one of the most picturesque rivers in the state. In fact, it puts one more in mind of the interior of a West Indian island than that of a middle Atlantic State. The growth of vegetation is so luxuriant and dense that in some cases it is with great difficulty that passage is made in going through the woods which line its bank. The water is of a beautiful dark blue and has that freshness and saltness of air about it which is only possessed by the ocean itself.

On this particular day the sky was radiant with flooded sunshine, and a gentle breeze was blowing, redolent with summer's fragrances. There was a delightful calmness on the river and bay, which persuaded one to spend his time in idly dreaming. A number of fishermen were indulging in this occupation under the shady trees after several hours of sport. Suddenly from one end of the island came a swiftly-rowed boat, in which were a number of young people, steered by a benevolent and elderly-looking man. Closely following, and seemingly in pursuit of it, came a second boat, steered by a middle-aged man, and propelled by two sturdy young men.

"Well! If there ain't Nellie Barnes and Dick Wilson running away to get married!" exclaimed one of the fishermen.

"And there goes old man Roche, Nellie's stepfather, in pursuit. Now won't Reme howl?"

"I bet on the lovely bride!"

"And I on the stern parent!"

"Come, boys, come! Jump into the boat, and let's see the fun out."

Dick Wilson's father had died some years ago, and left his son a fine farm of one hundred and fifty acres. Adjoining the Wilson farm was that of John Roche. For years there had been bad blood between the neighbors. It was all on account of a point of land projecting into the Choptank. Both Wilson and Roche claimed it, and when it was taken to law, it was decided in favor of Wilson. About two years ago Roche married a pretty widow named Barnes. She had a daughter whose name was Nellie. It was love on the first sight when Dick and Nellie accidentally met in the church on the mainland. From that time on the affection grew stronger. They fondly thought that no one knew it but themselves, but they were mistaken, for Mr. Roche had seen it at the very start, and tried by every means to keep them separated.

But love will always find a way.

Dick and Nellie put their heads together one Sunday at church and agreed to run away and get married on the sly. And what was more fortunate for them, was the fact that the good parson of the church resided on the island and was in full sympathy with the young couple.

The expectant bride was seated beside of her betrothed near the middle of the foremost boat. She was a sprightly, beautiful, black-eyed young woman, whose cheeks rivaled the peach in their color. There was a world of mischief lurking near her pretty mouth. But today her cheeks were pale with apprehension, and her smiles were sad.

The expectant groom was a stalwart and resolute young man. His mouth was concealed from view by a very heavy mustache. And as he sat in the boat he looked straight ahead.

He seemed perfectly cool, and ever and anon, by means of a large bundle which held the all-important veil and wreath, tried to assure and comfort Nellie with numerous squeezes of the hand and endearing words, which he fondly thought were not seen. But such was not the case. For the gigging, sharp-eyed bridesmaids, who were seated in the bow of the boat discovered them. They revealed their knowledge by numerous outbursts of laughter in the intervals left from charming the young rowers by the conversation.

The good parson was the elderly man and he it was who would tie the knot. He sat in the stern, steering with a decided precision.

And as the second boat approached Mr. Roche arose from his seat, and cried, with a string of oaths:

"What do you mean, Dick Wilson, by stealing my girl?"

"I'm not stealing her," Dick replied. "She comes of her own free will, and with her mother's consent. You have nothing against me in reason, and, besides, she's of age."

This was followed by outbursts of laughter and hurrahs from the boys in the boat. The only thing Mr. Roche did was to glare and swear. After recovering himself, he finally said:

"I have this against you, that you're your father's son, and you'll not have Nell. I'm the head of the house. Come out of that boat, Nell, or I'll shoot."

At these words he leveled a shotgun at Dick. Nellie screamed with terror. "Oh, Dick, let me go to him or he will kill you!"

"He'd like to, no doubt," said Dick "but he's afraid of shooting the rest, and, besides, he's too much of a coward. Do you think I'll give you up, darling, with the happiness that will be ours so near?" The last sentence was uttered to her alone, but the party heard the rest, and cheered him as before. But though they laughed, they did not cease rowing. Yet, they did not increase their lead, for the Roche boys pulled as lustily as ever.

"Once more, I say, stop and give her up or I'll fire in another minute," roared Roche again.

What the issue might have been it is impossible to say, but in the excitement neither party had paid any attention—at least the Roches had not—to the fishermen's boat. For just as his sons, by an extraordinary effort, almost touched the bridal boat, his boat dashed plump against their prow and overturned their craft in a second.

"It's our chance," cried Dick, and away they sped.

Meanwhile Roche and his sons, who all swam like fish, showered angry imprecations upon the awkward fishermen. The later apologized profusely and helped to right the boat. They had no idea but what they could pass between the boats; just did it for a lark, etc. Roche threatened dire vengeance on all of them, but his gun was now tranquilly reclining on the white sands, twenty feet below. There was no time to lose, since the fugitives were now nearly across, and Roche and his party soon left the fishermen far behind.

The bridal party saw them coming, and their triumph had fair to be short-lived. However, the parson took the dilemma by the horns.

"Children," said he, "it's an irregular thing to do, though perfectly legal; but I propose to marry you right here and now. That old fellow will not be ten minutes behind us when we reach the shore, and, besides, those boys have pistols."

"Oh, parson, you surely would not spoil a wedding like that," said the younger bridesmaid.

"My dear, I can bind their hearts and hands just as firmly under this blue sky as in the most holy church ever built."

So Nellie was assisted to arise and was helped in her efforts by the steadying arm of Dick. As she stood in the middle of the boat, under the clear sky, she made a demure-looking bride. The roses came back to her cheeks and she was herself once more.

As the good parson commenced the ceremony, one of the bridesmaids managed to put the wreath and veil upon Nellie. Although it was somewhat ruffled, it made quite a pretty appearance. The parson afterwards remarked that it was the shortest marriage ceremony in his experience. When they reached the shore a carriage was waiting there before the church in which the ceremony was to have taken place. It was a work of a few moments to go into the carriage and drive to the steamer, which was about to leave.

Just as the steamer pulled out, Mr. Roche and his sons, looking a little the worse for wear from the bath, struggled up from the beach. They were just in time to see Nellie waving her handkerchief from the lower deck.

And the race for the bride had been won.—St. Louis Republic.

Wanted to Look Like Dickens.

A familiar figure has vanished from the streets of Philadelphia. What has become of him nobody knows, but he is seen in his old haunts no longer. His name and his family history is unknown to the great number of his fellow citizens who knew his quaint face and figure so well. He was one of the army of imitators that flourished long ago, who made it their life study to ape the mannerisms and the style of dress of the eminent novelist, Dickens.

Many years ago, when Dickens came to this country, there were any number of men who were told by their friends that they greatly resembled the illustrious Englishman. The old gentleman who is the subject of this sketch was evidently one of these. He wore his hair brushed forward about his ears and neck; the beard, shaven on the cheek, remained always a handful on the chin, joining the mustache at the corners of the mouth. He wore the stock and tie that Dickens affected, and he even made it a point to assume the keen look which characterized the great novelist. Now he has passed away, and he was the last of Dicken's imitators.—Philadelphia Record.

BABY'S BURNING SKIN.

Skin Peeling Off, Skin Literally Afire, Cooled and Soothed by Chase's.

The great feature of Chase's Ointment—Almost instantly it touches itching, burning, eczematic skin, relieving the pain—Is a boon to mothers whose children are sufferers—There is nothing uncertain about it or this way of speaking about it:

"My six-year-old daughter, Bella, was afflicted with eczema for 24 months, the principal seat of eruption being behind the ears. I tried almost every remedy I saw advertised, bought innumerable medicines and soaps and took the child to medical specialists in skin diseases, but without result. Finally, a week ago, I purchased a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and the first application showed the curative effect of the remedy. We have used only one-sixth of the box, but the change is very marked, the eruption has all disappeared and I can confidently say my child is cured. (Signed)

A face that was a scab from forehead to chin cured in 10 days.

On behalf of the Fred Victor Mission Bible Class I wish to express our gratitude to you for the box of Chase's Ointment which you supplied in aid of our charitable work to the infant child of Mrs. Brownrigg, 162 River street. Ten days ago the child was awfully afflicted with scald head, the face being literally one scab from forehead to chin, and in that brief time a complete cure has been effected. Surely your gift was worth more than its weight in gold.

The greatest bridge which the world has seen or conceived is about to be erected by an engineer Canadian by birth and breeding. It is the new bridge to span the Hudson river between New York and the west. All preceding structures of the kind are belittled by this project. The Victoria bridge, the Brooklyn bridge, even the Forth bridge, they are bantlings besides the structure which is to overcross the Hudson river with a span more than half a mile from pier to pier, 150 feet above the water, and with a width of 125 feet bearing six sets of railway tracks side by side. Twenty-five million dollars is the estimated cost—about a third of what the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway actually cost from ocean to ocean across a vast continent. The engineer whose plan is accepted for this bridge is Charles Macdonald of the Union Bridge Company of New York. He was born in Gananoque, Ont., the son of W. S. Macdonald of old United Empire Loyalist stock.

AN ILLINOIS SENSATION.

A Lady of Union County recovers her Health in a Marvellous Manner

ANNA, Illinois, June 17.—A very interesting case of recovery from a complicated form of kidney trouble has taken place here, and the details are gradually being made public. The sufferer was Miss M. T. Loomis, who for a long time has been a victim to severe pains in all parts of the body. She consulted a number of doctors and was treated for a great variety of complaints, the diagnosis all proving faulty. At length she determined to try Dodd's Kidney Pills, having read and heard much of their efficacy and found her expectations justified in a complete cure.

Science Triumphant at Last.

Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the outcome of the latest scientific researches. There was always a prejudice against taking Cod Liver Oil on account of its disagreeable taste, but Miller's Emulsion is agreeable to the palate, and that is one reason why it has become so popular with the medical fraternity, the hospitals of the country and the households wherever consumption or lung troubles prevail. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all Lung affections. In Big Bottle, 50c. and $1, at all Drug Stores.
