A Word for the Down-Trodden.

Speaking of the much abused mother-in-law leads one to wonder whether she has not her grievances also. I saw a poor old woman the other day, who, early left a widow, worked hard during her best years to support an only son. He was a good boy, and repaid her as soon as he could, by becoming a bread-winner in his turn. That is, he earned a certain sum weekly, which his mother, a superior manager, contrived to make enough for their simple wants. They had a pretty little home, well and cozily kept, and my poor friend passed some happy years there before "George" brought home a wife. He was just twenty when this happened. Was it reasonable that the displaced mother-in-law should feel quite cordial to the girl who had voluntarily become a burden to a struggling youth? But after the first shock, she resolved to make the best of matters, and had she found a helper in her new daughter, things might have gone on tolerably well. But no; Mrs. George brought two unwelcome guests into that hitherto happy home—discontent and idleness; add to this a love of dress and power, and a determination to be a "mistress of her own house," and you have the whole story. In less than a year my poor old friend sadly left the home her own industry had made, and went to earn her bread among strangers as a nurse. Her son grieved for her, but poverty, combined with the will of a tyrannical wife left him powerless to alter the unhappy state of things, and so the two were practically parted forever. "He is not my boy any more," the mother sadly said, "but his wife's husband; I am alone in the world." And so she was—she, who had given all her working years for her son, was now desolate—A sad story, is it not? but not, unhappily, an uncommon one.

It was the Stairs.

A boy was sitting on the steps of a house on Fort street yesterday, his arm in a sling and several pieces of court plaster on his face, when a man came along and observed: "Let's see, but didn't you have a toy cannon out here the other day?" "Yes." "And didn't I tell you it was a dangerous plaything?" "Yes." "And warned you sooner or later it would bust on you?" "Yes." "And you have now discovered that I was talking for your good. I hope this will be a lesson to you." "Say, mister," replied the boy, as he exhibited the cannon "this is one of the times when you get left. Cannon is all right, powder is all right, and buckshot are all right. I got pulverized by falling down stairs while trying to be an angel to please my mother. Go on with your disinterested advice!"—Detroit Free Press.

So the World Wags.

A young man and a young woman lean over the front gate. They are lovers. It is moonlight. He is loth to leave, as the parting is the last. He is about to go away. She is reluctant to see him depart. "I'll never forget you," he says, "and if death should claim me, my last thought will be of you." "I'll be true to you," she sobs. "I'll never see anybody else or love them as long as I live." They part. Six years later he returns. His sweet-heart of former years has married. They meet at a party. Between the dances the recognition takes place. "Let me see," she muses, "with her fan beating a tattoo on her pretty hand, 'was it you or your brother who was my old sweetheart?" "Really I don't know," he says. "Probably my brother." The conversation ends.

How She Got Left.

A young man began visiting a young lady recently, and was very much pleased with her. One evening it was quite late when he called, and the young lady inquired where he had been. "I had to work to-night," he said. "What! do you work for a living?" she inquired in astonishment. "Certainly; I am a 'mechanic'!" replied the young man. "I dislike the word 'mechanic'!" and she turned up her pretty nose. That was the last time the young man visited the young lady. He is now a wealthy man, and has the nicest little wife in the city. The young lady who disliked a mechanic is the wife of a miserable fool—a regular loafer—and the miserable woman is obliged to take in washing to support herself and children. You dislike the name of a mechanic, eh? Any girl is a subject of pity who is so silly as to think less of a man because he is a mechanic.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

INVALUABLE AS A TONIC.

DE. J. L. PRATT, Greenfield, Ill., says: "It is all that it claims to be—invaluable as a tonic in any case where an acid tone is indicated."

The Old, Old Story.

My son, if I should publish a paper for twenty years—if you can just strain your credulity to the point of believing that I could keep a daily paper going longer than six weeks—if I should publish a daily paper twenty years, and in all that time take occasion to mention you about twice a week as our "distinguished fellow townsman" and "that eminent man of letters and merchant prince," and should say every time you crossed the river on the ferry that you had "departed" for the East, and when you came back I should notice that "our justly popular fellow citizen" had "returned"; if I should in all those years praise your dog, your horse, your goods, your wife and babies, your clothes and your character, and then some day, when I was away attending a convention, my local editor should call the attention of the town marshal to the filthy condition of the street and sidewalk in front of your store, would you ever forgive me? Would you? You would denounce the paper as a "scurrilous sheet" and its editor as "lying scandal monger that ought to be whipped out of the community." That is the reason, my son, why there are but two kinds of editors. One is a meek, smiling, timid little scrivener, who pays all the bills and allows his neighbors to edit his paper; and the other is a truculent, loud voiced savage, who viciously scratches out the nice little personal the local editor has written about your arrival home, and sends it in—"By some unscrutable degree of a stern and relentless Providence, old Jack Digenbaugh has been permitted to come back home alive," and then meets you at the head of the stairs with a black-jack and pounds the top of your head in when you come to see about it.—Burdette.

The Domestic Monthly for June, 1886.

"Children of Gibbon" is the striking title of the new novel by Walter Besant, which begins in the June number of the DOMESTIC MONTHLY. The novel treats of the problem of the poor with even more force and thoughtfulness than his celebrated story "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," some of the philanthropic suggestions in which are being carried out in the crowded slums of London.

The June number of the "Domestic" is exceptionally full of good things. Its illustrated articles are very attractive and its short stories much better than the average. The Fashion Department is the most complete of any magazine for women, and is overflowing with pretty designs and hints for summer costumes.

The full-page engraving in the "Domestic" is worth the price of the number.

THE DOMESTIC MONTHLY is published at 853 Broadway, New York, at $1.50 a year, postpaid. For $2.00 the magazine and two new books, "Kneadework" and "Knitting and Crochet," both with designs and illustrations, are sent.

Mutual Concession.

There was a large attendance at Friday evening's prayer meeting at the Blue Light tabernacle. After the exercises were over and the benediction had been pronounced, Jim Webster got up and addressed the pulpit as follows: "Parson, does you know dat dar am gwinter be a culleded 'scursion to Houston next Lord's day?" "I has heard so, Brudder Webster." "Well, parson, a two-third majority ob dis congregashun am desirous ob desecrating de nex' Lord's day by gwinter Houston on de 'scursion, and as de spokesman I has to submit a preperishun for your consideration." "What am dat preperishun?" "De preperishun am ter de effect dat ef you will 'scuse dis congregashun from 'tendin' de services in de mawnin', de congregashun will 'scuse you from 'tendin' de services in de ebenin'."

Misery Likes Company.

The small boy of the present day is seldom at a loss for something to say even in the most embarrassing situations. Bobby, a precocious youth of six, had been indulging in profanity, and in order to escape the punishment for which his mother had made preparations, he crawled under a barn and remained there in a state of siege for the greater part of an afternoon. When his father returned at night and learned how matters stood he made his way with much difficulty under the barn in search for the boy. "Hello, pa," said Bobby, cheerfully, as his sire approached, "have you been swearing, too?"

A Mistaken Idea.

"Let me tell you a good little story about a young man down our way," said a Brownville gentleman the other day. "The hero of the story is a well-known citizen of Tecumseh. He was married not long ago and started on a Southern wedding trip. When the train stopped at Topeka for dinner a waiter rushed out and began pounding a gong. The young man from Tecumseh, thinking it was intended for a charivari, rushed up to him and exclaimed: "Hold on, there! How did you fellows down here get on to this racket? Stop her! I'll set 'em up for the boys."

An Average Youngster.

"Mr. Featherly," said Bobby at the dinner table, "what's an average?" "An average?" "Yes. Pa says you come to see sister twice a week on an average." Featherly was very much amused. After explaining to Bobby the meaning of the word he said: "I suppose you thought it was some kind of a carriage, Bobby?" "I thought perhaps it might be a bicycle, but I knew it couldn't be a carriage, because ma says you're too mean to hire—" "Bobby," interrupted his mother, "will you have another piece of pie?"
