

The Honest Man Who Pays.

There is one among the many—
Can tell me where he stays?
He's an old, old-fashion party,
Called the honest man who pays;
Yes—the honest man who pays
Every dollar he may owe,
Keeping up the good old ways
That so many scarcely know.

If he gives his word of promise
'Tis a bond as good as gold;
If he holds a post of honor,
Not a trust is ever sold.
By the honest man who pays
Every debt he may incur,
Yielding to each a just reward,
And no grudging or demure.

And I'm told this rare old party
Lives within his income—won
By the fairest, squarest dealing
We see beneath the sun—
And the honest man who pays
Always holds its good and right
For the rich to help the needy
When the times are tough and tight.

THE ACCUSING PICTURE.

The tragic event which left Violet Malvern an orphan, occurred some three years before the time at which our story opens.

In the hour of her bereavement, a kind old uncle had come and taken her to his home, where it was that she was seen by Arthur Wolcott.

No charm appeals more warmly to a generous youthful fancy than that which grief lends to beauty. At the first glimpse of Violet's sweet, pensive face, Arthur Wolcott's heart was filled with sympathy and admiration.

Once or twice only did they meet in the brief period before his return to college to begin his last year. But short as the time had been, it had sufficed for the growth of feelings which the ardent young student would not have departed without declaring, had he not felt that so to do would be to profane a sacred sorrow.

But now, when he would have felt free to tell her of the sentiment which time had only served to strengthen, he found another so constantly at her side that it was difficult to gain an opportunity to speak, even had not rumor whispered that Lucien Durand, in monopolizing Violet's society, was but asserting an accepted suitor's right.

Not a pleasant expression did this Lucien make on Arthur Wolcott when the two encountered. Jealousy seldom finds perfection in a rival; and strikingly handsome as were the young foreigner's dark features, to Arthur's view they seemed a mask which but imperfectly concealed the working of a malignant and dangerous spirit. Nor had he been able when, at times, he saw Violet's look fixed intently on Lucien's sombre, faultless face, to settle whether the spell that bound her was the effect of fear or admiration.

Thus much Arthur learned of the intimacy between the Malverns and Lucien Durand, and how it had come about. While travelling in Italy, Violet and her uncle had been stopped on the highway, strange enough not far from the place where her father had been killed by brigands years before, by a band of robbers. Opportunely Lucien had appeared upon the scene, put the brigands to flight by a word, tendered assistance, and ever since had stood upon the footing of a friend.

'If ever the truth comes out,' growled Arthur to himself, 'I wager 'twill be found that the valiant knight who made the rescue was himself no other than the bandit captain! Such fellows have a dash of gallantry in them often.'

In such an unreasonable state was Arthur Wolcott's mind; but some allowance must be made for disappointed lovers.

'I could endure to see her,' would Arthur keep insisting to himself, 'the wife of some noble generous man. But his wife!' the thought made him shudder.

One day Arthur was sauntering through an art gallery, when his attention was drawn to a crowd collected before a large painting recently brought in, the work of an unknown artist.

'How horrible! How ghastly!' were the exclamations which greeted Arthur's ears as he pushed his way through the crowd.

Buy good, healthy food, cheaper and better clothing; get more real and substantial things of life every way, and especially stop the foolish habit of running after expensive and quack doctors or using so much of the vile humbug medicine that does you only harm, and makes the proprietors rich, but put your trust in the greatest of all simple pure remedies, Hop Bitters that cures always at a trifling cost, and you will see better times and good health. Try it once. Read of it in another column.

A Good Account.

"To sum it up, six long years of bed-ridden sickness and suffering, costing $200 per year, total $1,200—all which was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has done her own housework for a year since, without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it for their benefit."
