Keen Interest At Meat Cutters School

Keen interest is shown on the faces of those attending the school for merchants and merchant's meat cutters being conducted for three days by the poultry industry at Birch Court. Mr. F. M. Nash wields the knife as he prepares to cut up a broiler chicken. On his right is Mr. E. D. Bonnyman, Poultry Division, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa and Hon. C. C. Baker, Minister of Agriculture. Immediately behind Mr. Baker is Mr. S. C. Wright, deputy minister of Agriculture. (Barter's Film Lab.)

COURSE OPENS IN HANDLING OF POULTRY PRODUCTS AT BIRCH COURT

"The consumer is becoming price conscious and quality conscious and competition from other meat products is demanding that our poultry be put up in smaller packages," said Mr. E. D. Bonnyman, associate chief of poultry products, inspection and grading, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, in speaking at the opening of a three-day school for merchants or merchant's meat cutters, being conducted at Birch Court. There will be a different class each day.

The school is being conducted by Mr. F. M. Nash, District Inspector of Poultry Products, with headquarters at Moncton. Mr. Nash presided at the opening.

Hon. C. C. Baker, Minister of Agriculture congratulated the men of the poultry industry in this latest move to meet the competition in the food market of today. He believed that by the application of more up-to-date merchandizing methods, the producer would benefit. The Minister noted that with increased refrigeration now available this work should be facilitated greatly.

Mr. S. C. Wright, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, told the class that he was certain they would benefit from this course. "The things that would get by a few years ago, cannot pass today," said Mr. Wright. He remarked that while visiting a large store in one of the larger Canadian cities, the meat displays were most attractive and he hoped that those present at the school would go back to their places of business with a firm conviction to put into effect what they had learned.

Dr. George Fisher, who is one of the committee for the promotion of the poultry industry, stated that the Departments of Agriculture, Federal and Provincial, are only too happy to co-operate with the producers and the merchants and asked for their co-operation in return.

INFORMAL PROCEDURE
The school is conducted on a very informal basis. Rather than the instructor doing all the talking or all the demonstrating, each member is called upon to actually perform the various lessons, being taught and at the same time, a sympathetic ear was given to any personal ideas he might wish to express.

Mr. Bonnyman, who incidentally, started his career with the Island Poultry Division, told the class that the poultry marketing business is changing so rapidly that it is difficult to keep up with it. As an example he said that about two years ago large amounts of eviscerated turkey were being brought into a certain city, and at the time the merchants offered violent opposition to it. However, when the housewives bought the eviscerated birds and were not required to draw them, a popular demand was started for this type of product. The result was that several large firms last year refused to accept consignments that were not eviscerated.

Mr. Bonnyman went on to show that the trend in merchandizing is toward the smaller packaged product. "It is up to us to learn the know-how in marketing our products." In this respect he showed attractive displays. He noted that when meat is nicely arranged in the showcase it immediately attracts attention and the housewife will buy.

Mr. Bonnyman told the school that the five and six pound chicken is meeting stiff competition from the 2 1/2-3 1/2 lb. broiler since the younger bird offered more advantages to the producers, the merchant and the consumer. "By cutting the chicken up we can supply a customer in any amount and at any price, large or small," he said.

DEMONSTRATED METHOD
Keen interest was shown among the candidates yesterday when Mr. F. M. Nash began his demonstration of the proper method of cutting up a broiler for small packaging. Mr. Nash was very painstaking in his description of each operation and was kindly in his words of advice to each member who volunteered to try his hand at the task.

Following the cutting up process, Mr. Nash arranged his product very attractively in a refrigerated showcase. He then took them to a deep freeze show case where a number of American packaged products were attractively displayed in package form. Mr. Nash had some words of advice for the merchants in regard to the handling of poultry. He cautioned against the practice of allowing birds to be hung up in normal temperatures for any length of time. This, he said, robbed the meat of its natural flavor. As an alternative he urged immediate freezing after killing to seal in the flavor. He believed that the eviscerated product would eventually be the only one in demand and pointed out that the housewife, by purchasing the undrawn chicken was simply carrying 36 percent of the weight of the bird, which was absolutely useless. "At the same time," he said, "you are eliminating the possibility of the evisceration odour when the internals are removed."

The choice cuts of the bird are the legs, breast and liver, which make up about 85 percent of the weight. The remaining parts, the back, the wings, and the gizzard sell for a low price. To give the housewife an idea of how much she will have to pay in the new packaged chicken, Mr. Nash stated that in Halifax prices at the present time are as follows: Legs and thighs, 85c; breasts, 83c; livers, 80c; wings, 41c; backs, 10-15c and gizzards 15c.

Mr. Nash concluded his lecture with some actual demonstrations on egg deterioration when not kept at a proper temperature which he recommended to be between 55 to 60 degrees.
