

Mac Stresses Summit Meet

LONDON (AP)—Prime Minister Macmillan, in the last week of a general election campaign, said Saturday everything seems to be arranged for an East-West summit meeting except setting the time and place.

The date will not be announced before the election Thursday, he indicated.

"Everything seems to be clear except just to make arrangements," he told reporters at a conference at Conservative Party headquarters.

"President Eisenhower has gone off for a week's rest so that might delay it. But everybody is agreed it is a matter of fixing date and place—and the people who will represent Britain."

TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Ounce Of Effort Urged To Curb Delinquency

This third of four articles lists the steps the National Education Association says can be adopted in any school right now to help erase the blight of delinquency.

By G. K. Hadenfield
WASHINGTON (AP)—An ounce of effort to prevent juvenile delinquency is worth a pound of treatment that comes too late.

Many high schools, particularly in the big cities where delinquency is rampant, have excellent programs for wayward boys. But the twig has already been bent — by adolescence a youngster's personality and way of life are fairly well set.

To be truly effective, a program for maladjusted and emotionally disturbed children must be started at the earliest possible school level.

These often-overlooked points are stressed in a research report published here by the National Education Association. More than 500 experts contributed their ideas during the NEA's year-long study.

COST IS PROBLEM
A program starting in the elementary grades and continuing through high school obviously is going to cost a lot of money.

But only in this way, says the report, can the community hope to avoid an ever heavier cost—that which must be paid when the youngster carries his physical, social or emotional problems into adult life.

The report lists four ways by which the school can fight juvenile delinquency:

IN THE REGULAR CLASSROOM
Through the use of highly trained teachers.

By adjusting the curriculum, or school program, to the needs of the individual students.

Through the use of special school personnel—guidance workers, school nurses and doctors, psychologists, case workers, speech therapists, remedial reading experts and psychiatrists.

Special classes for the extremely bright and the extremely dull, as well as for those with severe physical handicaps. Hospital care was recommended for the worst of the emotionally disturbed youngsters.

USE PART-TIME HELP
When a school system is too small to afford the full program, the report says, the school should obtain part-time help, or try to fill the needs on a regional basis.

"The teacher's part in helping the delinquent is always crucial and potentially beneficial," says the report, "but it is never simple and easy."

To be effective, a teacher must have a strong desire to work with children and young people — even difficult and dirty youngsters. An antagonistic teacher only aggravates the situation. On the other hand, children are merciless with teachers who appear weak.

The teacher must understand individual differences in children.

He must be quick to recognize signs of boredom and reluctance, and quick to rekindle interest. He must try to retain the youngster in school, but must not be afraid to ask for help from specialists on the staff.

Telephone Call Finds Paintings

TORONTO (CP)—An anonymous personal phone call to police chief James Mackey resulted in the recovery Saturday night of six masterpieces stolen from the Toronto Art Gallery Sept. 15.

The return of the paintings, insured for $640,000 but valued at upwards of $1,000,000, lightened the heart of gallery director Martin Baldwin, even though they were slightly chipped and scratched.

The paintings were recovered from an unlocked garage where police found them in a corner, rolled up in heavy white wrapping paper. No arrests have been made.

Chief Mackey said news that the paintings had been found was not made public until Monday since detectives had been watching the garage in the hope the thieves might return.

He indicated he might know the identity of the thieves. "We've got our ideas but have nothing concrete yet."

Two of the art treasures were by Franz Hals, two others were Rembrandts, and the others were a Renoir and a Reubens.

THIEVES HID
Police believe the thieves hid in the gallery and dropped the paintings to an accomplice through a second-storey window.

The paintings were cut from their frames but Mr. Baldwin said the gallery had kept the jagged edges and the canvases could be woven together.

Chief Mackey said he received the mysterious phone call telling him where the pictures were late Saturday night. He summoned detectives who had been working on the case and together they went to the garage.

Mr. Baldwin said "just how serious the damage will be is a matter of arbitration between the gallery and the insurance people. Gallery officials have spoken to the authorities regarding further security measures at the gallery, he said.

The robbery was believed to be the largest art theft in Canada. Police had sent a description of the paintings all over the world.

A statement from Mr. Sterling Gillespie of Souris, President of the P. E. I. Restaurant Association:

This month—"Restaurant Month"—Prince Edward Island Restaurants are featuring the theme 'Eating out Gives Life a Lift' and well they may! No man would work a seven day week, but they expect it of their wives!

Surely one meal a week would be little enough for the lady of the house to receive, one meal that does not require hours of preparation or an hour's work cleaning up afterwards.

Eating out does give life a lift—it can be a happy occasion for the whole family.

There are many fine restaurants in Prince Edward Island whose chefs know how to tickle your palate—whose hostesses know how to put you at ease—whose managers spend many hours planning new delights and new ways to win your interest. Now is an opportune time to take advantage of restaurant hospitality—and to provide a welcome change for your wife and family.

For me, and my fellow restaurant operators, every month means "Restaurant Month", and we can only be successful if you have caught our enthusiasm and are eating out to give your life a lift!

DINE OUT TODAY!
