Two Can Sing

by James M. Cain
CHAPTER ONE Part Three

"Stop that for a minute, Leonard, and listen to me. Louise Bronson just called up. She was talking last night with Rudolph Hertz." Hertz was a critic on one of the newspapers. "You know, he's related to her."
"And?"
"She told him he had to come and give me a review, and he promised to do it. But the fool told him it was tomorrow instead of today, and Leonard, you'll have to call him up and tell him."
"Why do I have to call him up?"
"Leonard, he's the most important man in town—it's just a stroke of luck that he promised to give me a review, and I can't lose it just because of a silly mistake over the day."
I went into the bedroom and picked up the phone book. He wasn't in it. I called information. They said they would have to have the address.

Doris began screaming at me from the dressing-room: He lives on Central Park West! In the same building as Louise!"
I gave the address. They said they were very sorry but it was a private number and they wouldn't be able to give it to me.
So I hustled on the rest of my clothes, and jumped in a cab and went over there. I apologized for calling so early, and mumbled something about Louise Bronson and how anxious we were to have his opinion on my wife's voice, and for a minute Hertz sat and stared at me. Then he cut me off and cut me off sharply: "My dear fellow, I can't go to every recital at the drop of a hat. If notices were sent out my paper will send somebody over, and there was no need whatever for you to come to me about it."

"Louise Bronson—"
"Yes, Louise said something to me about a recital, but I don't let her run my department either."
Then I saw we weren't alone. Through the double door was a breakfast-room, and two women were in there, listening. One of them, in a kimono, seemed to be his wife. The other one had a hat on and looked a guest. I couldn't see her face but she was leaning toward the wife, whispering something and laughing.
I felt my face get hot. I said I was sorry, and got out of there as fast as I could grab my hat.
The recital didn't help any. The place was packed with stooges, and they clapped and it didn't mean a thing. I sat with Randolph and Evelyn, and we clapped too, and after it was over and about a ton of flowers had gone up, and my flowers too, we went backstage with the whole mob to tell Doris how swell she was, and you would have thought it was just a happy family party. But as soon as my face wasn't red any more from thinking about the critic, it got red about something else. About a third of that audience were children. That was how they had got back at us, those people we had sandbagged. They bought tickets, but they sent their children—with nursemaids.

Doris took our children home and I went out and ate, and then went over to the office. About two-thirty the phone rang.
"Mr. Borland?"
"Speaking."
"This is Cecil Carver."
She spoke as though I'd know who Cecil Carver was, but I never heard the name before. "Yes, Miss Carver? What can I do for you?"
Perhaps I ought to explain. I'm a singer. I happened to be visiting up in Central Park West this morning when you called, and I heard what was said."

ST. ANDREW'S Y. P. S.

Enola MacKenzie, entertained the members of the Y. P. S. of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Montague, on Tuesday evening, March 18th at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. MacKenzie, the president, Thelma Larter, presided.
The meeting opened with the hymn "Work For The Night Is Coming" and the devotional period was in charge of Phyllis Reid, assisted by Thelma Stewart.
Roll call was answered by thirteen members and one visitor was present. The minutes were read by Lucy Miller and approved as read. The mission study was about Formosa and a chapter on the mission work carried on by the late Rev. George Leslie MacKay, one of the first Canadian missionaries to Formosa, was read and discussed.

At the close of the meeting the members enjoyed a social hour of games and contests and a delicious lunch was served by the hostess.
