Let these eight of practice illuminate the dark places of Theory.

THOROUGHLY Progressive Practical Institution, in which young men and women are not only taught Book-keeping (single and double entry, but are trained how to do business, by actual business transactions. The students act as buyers, sellers, traders, bankers, book-keepers and accountants, in actual business operations, and the currency issued by the College Bank and the money issued from the Emporium, are used in bona fide business transactions, just the same as in mercantile and banking houses. Book-keeping in itself may be learned at home, but a knowledge of how to transact business, cannot be thus acquired. That our course of training is eminently practical, is proved by the testimonials from business men, and from students who are now holding lucrative and responsible positions.

SUBJECTS:
Book-keeping by single and double entry (theoretical and practical); Actual Business Practice, Business Penmanship, Business Correspondence, Commercial Arithmetic, Commercial Law, Railroading, Steamboat-ing, Banking, (actual practice in the College Bank); Typewriting, Shorthand and Navigation.

MYSTERY OF A LIGHT

A BALL OF FIRE THAT IS SEEN AT NIGHT ON A GEORGIA FARM.

It is Said to Rise From an Old Slave's Grave, to Which It Returns After Making the Rounds—Unlike the Common Phosphorescent Light.

"In Dekalb county, Ga., four miles from the village of Lithonia," said a native of that county, "is what is now known as the McWilliams farm. Fifty years ago a family named Reid owned the place and lived there. The head of that family, Jasper Reid, was a headstrong, tyrannical man. He had a female slave named Jude. Reid was hard with his slaves, and for some act of insubordination, real or fancied, he had the woman Jude flogged one day and then locked her in a pen, where he kept her on short rations until she died, a month or so later. Jude's body was buried in a piece of woods in a solitary place on a hillside 300 yards or so from the house. Jude and the solitary grave on the hillside would have been forgotten years ago if it hadn't been that one night a week or so after the poor slave's body had been buried a curious phenomenon made its appearance at the grave and has persisted in appearing periodically ever since, thus keeping itself ever fresh in the minds of the people thereabout and necessarily perpetuating the memory of Jude and the lonely grave. That phenomenon is known as Jude's light.

"It first appeared to old Jasper Reid himself. He was sitting on the piazza of his house one night when he saw a ball of fire rise in the woods directly on the spot where Jude's grave was. The house stood—and stands yet—in the fork of two small creeks that join just below it, and the bottom land was swampy and covered with canebrakes. It was not an uncommon thing to see phosphorescent lights dance and float with the wind over and among those brakes under certain conditions of the weather, and Reid supposed this light that rose on the hill was one of these, although he had never before seen any of the phosphorescent will-o'-the-wisps appear so far from the lowlands, nor any so large as this one. The light rose several feet above Jude's grave, lingered there a moment and then started slowly down the hill toward the house. This amazed and startled Reid, for quite a strong wind was blowing directly up the hill, and yet this light was traveling with ease against it, something no phosphorescent light had ever been known to do. Besides, this light illuminated with a deep reddish tinge the bushes and trees as it passed along. Reid was greatly disturbed in spite of himself as the light came on, but he believed it would disappear in the swamp, as the will-o'-the-wisps all did. But this light passed right on through the brakes and moved straight toward the house. Reid had not the courage to remain longer in sight of the uncanny thing and hastened into the house. The light did not stop in its direct course until it reached the house, and then it passed round and round the house, as Reid solemnly declared to neighbors and as he wrote to a friend in Atlanta. It lingered about the premises an hour, watched by Reid and terror-stricken members of his household, when it returned to the spot in the woods where it had first appeared, hovered a moment in the air and dropped to the ground and disappeared. This light continued to appear thus at irregular intervals for a month, when Reid, to escape the worry it gave him and the terror it kept his family in, sold his farm and moved away.

"A man named Bunt purchased the place, and I think descendants of his live there yet; but, at any rate, every one who has lived on the farm since Reid went away has seen and wondered at Jude's light and its queer actions. Nathan Lyons, who lived on the farm once, says he has seen the light more than a hundred times. I have seen it myself three times. Although it is always a weird and startling apparition, it long ago ceased to be a source of alarm or uneasiness to the people of the locality, and even the superstitious negroes manifest no terror when it appears, although they all sacredly believe that it is poor Jude, the slave, transformed for some cause into a ball of fire and doomed to make these eccentric journeys about the place where she once toiled.

"This strange light is sparkling, but not brilliant. It invariably rises from Jude's grave, or where the grave used to be, for there is no mound there now, and never disappears until it returns to that spot. One time when a man named Hartman lived on the farm a brother of his from Atlanta who was skeptical about this queer light came up there to investigate it. It appeared on the scene the first night the investigator was there and was particularly bright and erratic. It came down the hill, passed over the farm and circled round, proceeded up the swamp and then off into the woods until it had gone in that direction nearly a mile, where it remained stationary. This, Hartman's brother thought, was his opportunity, and he decided to go up to Jude's grave and be there when the light came back and note how it disappeared. He started rapidly up the hill. Jude's light glimmered in the distance. Hartman was within three or four rods of the grave when the light glided down through the woods so quickly that it was poisoning over the grave before the investigator had gone two paces nearer and dropped to the ground and disappeared before Hartman could realize what had occurred.

"This strange light differs so radically from the common phosphorescent lights of the Georgia swamps that it cannot be one of those. The phosphorescent lights can only travel with the wind. This light moves in the face of the strongest winds. Phosphorescent lights vary in size and appearance. This light is always the same size—about as large as an average sized cantaloupe—and always of the same reddish glow, casting an illuminated belt perhaps a yard on each side of it and ahead and behind it as it moves. It always rises at the same spot and passes along at the same height above the ground. It appears in the driest and hottest as well as in the coldest and wettest weather. It doesn't come out every night nor at any particular time of night, but Thomas Mize, who lived on the farm two years, said he saw Jude's light 300 nights during those two years and never later than 11 o'clock at night."—New York Sun.

A WORD TO THE CARELESS

Many persons do not value their teeth. If they have the toothache their first and only thought is to have the tooth extracted. Just a few words on that point, they go and have it taken out, that is the last of that tooth; they cannot get it back again. Another tooth will begin troubling; out it goes, too, and soon after a while the person cannot masticate food; consequence is their health becomes impaired; then they pay doctors bills, buy medicine, etc., and as a last resort they get artificial teeth. Now look at the question from a business standpoint. In the first place what would be the cost to save the tooth and keep it good for a lifetime? Perhaps $1.00, and you will have your own teeth in your head, and they were most certainly put there for use. Now think of this—if you had a wart on your finger, that troubled you, would you have the finger cut off to remove the wart? Why certainly not. Well, why loose a tooth to remove an ache. We can stop toothache and save the tooth, and guarantee them never to ache again.

Artificial Teeth

must be good to be satisfactory. We guarantee satisfaction or we don't want your money.

You can call in in the morning and have your teeth same day.
