New Health Policy

We have come a long way in health services in recent years, as was clearly indicated by the Hon. Dr. Bonnell, Provincial Health Minister, in his address at the King's County Memorial Hospital meeting last night. The Provincial Department has now launched a new policy, of free laboratory tests to be supplied by the Division of Laboratories of his department, which will be made available to the people of this Province without direct cost as of July 1st. This will afford welcome financial relief to hospital patients requiring these services, and will equalize the benefits of laboratory techniques which are of tremendous value in combating disease, and are being continually improved. In recent years many of these services have been made available to patients at cost, but the new policy of free services includes the more elaborate tests, not ordinarily carried out in hospital laboratories or in office examinations.

Government revenue could not be put to better use than in providing free facilities of this kind, for they are of direct benefit to the health of all our people. The Department is to be commended on its initiative in this matter, in which it is receiving assistance in the form of a laboratory grant from the Federal Government but which is, essentially, a provincial policy for which the minister, Dr. Bonnell, is directly responsible.

Taxpayers' Money

According to official figures, the Federal Government's finances are in good shape; so good, that Mr. Harris' surplus for the first two months of the current fiscal year is more than double what it was when the year began. This means, barring unexpected reduction in the nation wealth, that the surplus next March 31st will be a great deal bigger than the Finance Minister had estimated in his budget speech, perhaps more than twice as big.

In such circumstances, one would suppose that immediate tax reductions or a much needed increase in old age security pensions and the like would be well within the limits of economic soundness, election or no election. But that, apparently, is not the view of the Government. It is a pity that huge surpluses, drawn from the most part from personal and corporation income taxes, can be shared with the people in one way or another only when an election is pending. The fact that it is an established practice is no excuse for it.

An Important Question

Figures recently presented to Parliament in the form of a White Paper show that this country's defense system is costing a lot of money, close to the $2 billion mark for the current fiscal year. No Canadian citizen will begrudge one dollar of it, if it can be shown that the money is being well spent with due regard for the country's security on the one hand and its free world commitments on the other. In a sense the two obligations go together, since the strength of our own security system depends very largely on what NATO can do to assure the strength of the Atlantic region as a whole. Prime Minister St. Laurent does not intend to have Lt. Gen. Guy Simmonds, former chief of army staff, appear before any Parliamentary committee, but there is some indication that a Commons defence committee will be formed to investigate the charges against the defence department. Among other things, Gen. Simmonds has claimed that defence headquarters is top-heavy with personnel and is cumbersome. He says the chiefs of staff are prevented from advising the minister and the permanent Canada-United States joint board on defence blocks free discussion between the Canadian and American chiefs of staff. There is a strong tendency in any government to accumulate a tremendous civil service staff, usually far more than is necessary for the efficient administration of a country. And with each additional employee, the red tape is multiplied.

Some Opposition members are reported to be critical of the present policy of the Defense Department in going ahead with building arms that may be considered obsolete within a short period. This certainly is something worth considering, especially in view of a report made recently to a United States Congressional Committee by two Air Force generals to the effect that the entire air defense of this continent, American as well as Canadian, is weak and inadequate. If that is a correct appraisal, it is important that due note be taken of it in Ottawa as well as in Washington.

This is one subject which members of all political parties can discuss dispassionately without rancour, and in a common desire to keep the nation prepared for any emergency that may arise, arrive at a mutually satisfactory decision. Certainly, nothing more important is likely to come before Parliament this session.

Hydrogen Bomb Tests

The widespread demand for an end to hydrogen bomb tests is receiving the attention of at least one Western government which is directly involved in them. Prime Minister Eden has told the Commons that British delegates will bring the matter up at the meeting of the United Nations Disarmament Commission in New York early in July.

There are, of course, difficulties in the way. One is the position taken by the Soviet Union which calls for an immediate ban on all nuclear weapons, to be followed by gradual disarmament in other fields. Another is the position of the United States which advocates limitation of tests, but only as one phase in a total disarmament plan. In effect, the British suggestion, which has already been approved by the French, is to limit the tests first without actually banning the manufacturing of the weapon. That being done, they believe, general disarmament could be started, leading ultimately to a ban of nuclear power.

The British are not taking the view that neither the Soviet nor the American plan contains merit, but simply that neither is practical at the present time. The plan that Prime Minister Eden evidently has in mind is in the nature of a compromise. If accepted, a start towards disarmament could be made, which in itself would be an achievement. But perhaps the best thing about it is that it shows respect for world opinion, at least that section of it that can make itself heard, which definitely and in increasing volume is opposed to continuing hydrogen tests, each one bigger and more dangerous than the previous one.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Who are the most courageous, lawyers, policemen, prisoners, or telephone operators? Here is the evidence: In a town in Natal a swarm of bees went into action under the floors of a legal concern's office. The lawyers immediately fled to a nearby police station, followed by the bees. Two constables ran into the street where prisoners were at work. The prisoners ran back to the jail for safety. The bees then invaded a telephone exchange. The operators remained at their posts until chemical bombs had dispersed the bees.

Swedes are not noted for practicing total abstinence; their Viking ancestry would make that most unlikely. Yet, the rate of highway accidents due to over-indulgence in liquor is much lower than the world average. This may be because of their strict law enforcement. Any driver who is stopped by police when suspected of having tasted liquor before entering his car is taken to the police station where he is subjected to a blood test. If the percentage of alcohol present is high enough to indicate that he has drunk a certain specified amount of liquor, a very small amount, or three glasses of beer, he is sentenced to jail without the option of a fine. The fact that he was not actually drunk or "impaired" does not help him a bit.

Eastern Morocco Today

By Joseph D'Yonan
Associated Press, Oujda, Morocco

The sultan's green-starred emblem droops alone from a single flagpole atop the Governor's Palace in this dusty town a few miles from the Algerian border. A few weeks ago the rambling Moorish structure had two flagpoles. The French Tricolor was always there, too, representing the French governor. Now there is a new governor, a young and vigorous chief of the Moroccan Army of National Liberation, named by Sultan Mohammed Ben Youssef.

This is eastern Morocco, where the new regime of Ben Youssef still has only a shadow of authority, where the hillside warriors of the liberation army rule the interior, and where trained and disciplined French troops are still the main symbols of law and order.

At the palace, a Spahi guard lounges with his rifle at the gate to the inner patio. Inside, Arabs, many obviously from the countryside, await to see the governor, Ould Ahmed Hamidou, or his aides. Two blocks away, the French Tricolor flaps from the office building headquarters of Gen. Pierre d'Esneval and his 4th Infantry Division, recently arrived from West Germany.

DROWSY AIR

But—in contrast with neighboring Algeria—there are no armed patrols on the streets, and no curfew. There is a curious air of drowsiness. Business, you are told, is lagging, and production in the nearby mines of lead, manganese and coal has fallen off.

Although the governor's If avows his loyalty to the sultan, there are others in Oujda who maintain Hamidou's first allegiance is to the liberation army. They say this army pursues an independent course in aiding the Algerian rebels whenever it can.

The governor has been called to Rabat for a conference of regional administrators. Ben Youssef, riding a wave of popularity, is attempting to impose his authority. He wants control of the liberation army. Having signed a treaty of independence with France he may want that guerrilla force to abstain from interfering in the French territory across the border. A halt in that aid is one of the aims of the French troops.

Ben Youssef, it appears, is gradually putting the squeeze on Hamidou, who cannot afford any public opposition to the sultan. A few days ago the sultan's heir, Prince Moulay Hassan, chief of staff of the fledgling Royal Moroccan Army, was here to inspect the liberation troops, Hamidou, who offered the sultan no choice when it came to naming a provincial governor, was nevertheless careful to be at the prince's elbow in all the official photographs.

The governor had scarcely left town in answer to the call from Rabat when Col. Mohammed Daoudi, director of the Moroccan Royal Army Schools, appeared to recruit young officers—a step toward integrating the liberation army into the sultan's forces. But that is still in the future.

Security Through Community

Christian Science Monitor

The search for a Western policy adequate to these changing, post-Stalin times goes into another stage this week as the American and French foreign ministers meet at Washington.

Mr. Dulles is getting "an earful". He has heard Canada's Mr. Pearson on what the Soviet "new look" is doing to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer on why the "new look" is all but meaningless, and, we can confidently say, is now hearing M. Pineau's arguments for treating it as a new hope for peace.

The broad aspect of the conflict between Dr. Adenauer's and M. Pineau's views reflects more than a differing estimate on the part of each to the Soviet's intentions. It includes also their own private forecasts as to how the interests of their own countries might be affected by the adoption of a tough or soft response to the "new look" SOFTER APPROACH

The possibility of a softer approach to Moscow by the United States could have certain disadvantages for Dr. Adenauer and West Germany's competitive position in world trade, as well as setting back German hopes for eastern border readjustment and perhaps even reunification.

many. This has not been favorably received, according to reports, in Western circles, perhaps because of too early timing or lack of a proper context which could win German assent. But it shows the possibility of tackling some tough problems from a middle ground within NATO.

Mr. Pearson, who preceded Dr. Adenauer and M. Pineau to Washington, is leading member of a committee to study the possibilities of NATO becoming a more potent political arbiter among its own members. At some point in the near future his work must take account of many such conflicts as those expressed in the Adenauer and Pineau approaches to Washington.

At this moment it is obvious to us all, and not only to a grinning Russian bear, that Western policy is searching its way out of confusion. The Washington meetings represent a beginning.
