children are sick children. Their inactivity and sober faces are not in keeping with robust childhood. They lack vitality and resistive power, and are very susceptible to colds and contagious diseases.

Scott's Emulsion brings new life to such children. It enriches the blood; it restores health and activity; it gives vigor and vitality to mind and body.

The Transvaal War

OLD ENGLAND TOO.

A REMINDER THAT ENGLISH SOLDIERS HAVE DONE NOBLY AS WELL AS THOSE OF THE SCOTCH AND IRISH RACES.

Mr. Edward Wellings, of Toronto, writes: Some people are fond of insinuating that the English regiments during the recent operations in South Africa have not been reaping as many laurels as the Scotch or Irish. Such an insinuation has no warrant in fact. English men form 75 per cent. of the British army now in South Africa, and the number and prominence of their deeds in the war are not less than their numerical superiority demands. And although wherever an Irish or killed corps has fought it has conducted itself with bravery unsurpassed, the number and value of the services that Scots and Irishmen have rendered is only commensurate with their numbers in the British army. The Scotch and Irish soldiers reap fame in the war not so much from the number of their achievements, for in that they do not equal the English, as from their military character, in which they do. In every fight of every importance English regiments have been engaged, and wherever engaged they have not yet failed to win by their deeds all distinction and fame. The King's Royal Rifles at Glencoe; the Devons and Manchester at Eland's Laagte; the Devons at the repulse of the assault on Ladysmith on January 6th; the Gloucesters at Reitfontein; the Leicesters and Liverpools at Farquhar's Farm; and the "Old and Bold Fighting Fifth," the Grenadier and Coldstream Guards, the Northumberland Fusiliers at Belmont and Modder River; the Yorkshire Light Infantry and Royal North Lancashiremen at Enslin; the Coldstreams again at Magersfontein; and Hildyard's men, the Queen's West Surreys, the East Surreys, the West Yorkshires and the 2nd Devons at Beacon Hill and Colenso by valor in arms have rendered such brilliant services to their country's cause as to make the names of their corps everywhere renowned.

Since Colenso, too, the English regiments have borne (as befits them) the principal part in the struggle. Warren's division is altogether English. At Spion Kop, where it played the principal part, it fought with the utmost valor, and by its conduct earned for itself a full measure of glory. Two of its regiments, the Lancashire Fusiliers and the Middlesex, received from Gen. Buller special commendation in his report. Since Spion Kop the division has been heavily engaged, and has performed most brilliant service. It would be difficult to imagine a general giving much higher praise in an official document than that which Buller bestowed on the South Lancashires for what he terms their "magnificent" work of Pieter's Hill on February 27. It is noteworthy, too, that Buller in his report of this battle gave special praise to no other regiment. The Durham Light Infantry, for its behavior at Vaalkranz, and the King's Royal Rifles for its conduct at Spion Kop, for which it received special mention in Buller's despatch, are two other gallant English regiments which have won glory in the recent struggles. Buller in his reports of the battles subsequent to Colenso, has specially commended eight Imperial regiments. Of these six are English and two are Scotch. The West Surrey and the Rifle Brigade are mentioned in connection with the attack on Monte Cristo. The Scots Fusiliers are noted for their share in the same battle, and the Scottish Rifles are noted for their part at Spion Kop.

Turning now to the western theatre of warfare we find that the Essex men, the Shropshires, the Gloucesters, the Cornwalls, the Oxfordshire Light Infantry, the East Kent Regiment and the Yorkshires have all fought with the greatest of valor, have performed most signal service, and have won for themselves corresponding fame.

Gentlemen.—While driving down a very steep hill last August my horse stumbled and fell, cutting himself fearfully about the head and body. I used MINARD'S LINIMENT freely on him and in a few days he was as well as ever.

Mauzers and Lee-Enfields.

The chief distinction between the Mauser and the Lee-Enfield is this—that while the Lee-Enfield has a magazine which is inserted underneath the body through the trigger guard and secured by a catch and is provided with what is called a "cut off" to prevent the cartridges from rising, so that it can be used as a simple breechloader for single firing until the magazine, which contains ten cartridges, is ordered to be used, the Mauser has a magazine which, though not absolutely fixed, is only intended to be taken off for cleaning. It does not need a "cut off" to use as a single loader.

The magazine contains five cartridges, but whereas the cartridges for the Lee-Enfield have, when the magazine is charged, to be each put in separately, the magazine of the Mauser is filled at once by placing against the face of the magazine a set of five cartridges held in a clip which falls off when the cartridges have been inserted in the magazine.

Thus if each weapon were at the beginning of a fight empty, the Mauser would permit of more rapid fire because it could be loaded five cartridges at a time, while the Lee-Enfield would take, cartridge by cartridge, as long to load as a single breechloader. On the other hand, the times when a very rapid discharge of fire is desirable are not numerous, and for these the Lee-Enfield has ten cartridges ready against the Mauser's five.—Nineteenth Century.

Key, Kee, Kay.

Professor Skeat wishes to know when the pronunciation of key as kee can first be clearly detected. It occurs in Milton, "Comus," line 13:

To lay their just hands on that golden key
That opens the palace of eternity
And a little later in Marvell's "Fleecio":

Now as two instruments to the same key
Being tuned by art, if the one touched be,
The other opposite as soon replies.

These instances are curious, for both before and after this time the prevailing pronunciation was evidently kay. Herbert rhymes the word with way. In "The Secrets of Angling" (1613) culverkeys is rhymed with rays. In Wither's "Mistress of Philarete" (1622), key with day. Dryden, too, and Swift have the same pronunciation, and not till I come to Green's "Spleen" (1737) do I, after an hour's search, find the other. There pleas rhymes with keys. This pronunciation must, however, have become common soon afterward.

In Duncombe's "Imitation of Gray's Elegy" it is rhymed with me, and Garrick rhymes it with flea, which would, I suppose, be pronounced then as it is now. Nares, in his "Elements of Orthoepy" (1764), says of the diphthong ey, "Its proper sound should be that of the long e. This, however, is given so it only in the word key, for ley—a field—is constantly written lea."—Notes and Queries.

Fifty years ago this month, Dr. Johnson left with me some of his Anodyne Liniment. I remember him distinctly, and could tell you just how he was dressed on that day. "More Sociable."

A lady who has recently returned from abroad had a curious experience at the little town of Dinant, in Belgium. She was traveling in a party of three, including another lady and a young man. They sought accommodation at a hotel and were shown a room in which there were three beds and on a deal table three basins and jugs about as big as sloop basins and milk jugs.

The ladies explained that one room was quite insufficient for their needs, but it was a long time before they could get the hostess to understand why. They were then shown another room with three beds, three sloop basins and three milk jugs and were told that they could have that, too, if they liked to pay for the six beds. It was therefore arranged that the man should have one room and three beds and the ladies the other room and three beds.

"Do you always sleep in threes?" said one lady to the hostess.
"Yes," was the reply; "it is much more sociable."—Madame.

Funny Men.

The jests of Hellogabalus were very practical. He was fond of inviting people with some physical deformity to dinner and making jokes about them. At times he would invite a dozen hunchbacks or a score of squinting ladies or an equal number of baldheads. Once he put a large number of excessively fat people, all very hungry, into a small chamber where dinner was waiting. There was no room to eat it. Another diversion of which he was fond was that of placing his guests on air sofas, so that when they were about to drink he could let the air out and have both sofa and guest collapse.

It is said that Nero, the Roman emperor, liked to "shy" nuts at the bald heads of the praetors who sat below during the performance at the theater, and they were expected to maintain their baldheaded dignity and refrain from "shying" them back at him.

Multum in Parvo

Would be a suitable motto for our Gents' Furnishings Department, for although the articles are small in themselves our trade is so large in this department that it is one of our most important lines.

And it requires a great deal of looking after; there are so many different little things to be looked after such as

- Collars,
- Handkerchiefs,
- Cuff Holders,
- Gloves,
- Cuffs,
- Garters,
- Hair Brushes,
- Neckties,
- Cuff and Collar Buttons,
- Hosiery,
- Combs,
- Braces,
- Armlets,
- etc.

Small things in themselves but very, very important. Now we give particular attention to this department and endeavour to have at hand anything of this sort which you may need.
