30 Years After Death Jean Harlow Is Most Talked About Screen Star

By JAMES BACON

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Jean Harlow, the blonde bombshell of the movies' golden era, is exploding all over Hollywood—and soon the world.

Four movies based on her life are in the works. The new spring fashion lines already are showing the Harlow Look, featuring satiny, clinging fabrics with slinky full sleeves and low cut bodices. Beauty shops are promoting Harlow platinum blonde hairdos.

And, at the moment, she is the most talked-about star in town.

All of which is most unusual for a star who has been dead nearly 30 years.

Joseph Levine's production of Harlow is scheduled to hit the screen first. It will star Carroll Baker, Hollywood's newest sex symbol, who bears a striking resemblance to Jean.

Peter Lawford will play Paul Bern, the husband who committed suicide 65 days after their marriage in what is still one of Hollywood's biggest mysteries.

Irving Shulman, an English professor at California State College at Los Angeles, reopened the Harlow era with a best-selling biography of the star, based in great part on reminiscences of Jean's first agent, Arthur Landau.

LIKE MONROE

To the younger generation, it might oversimplify things to say Harlow was the Marilyn Monroe of her time. But the movie careers of Monroe and Harlow were strikingly similar. Each was the sex symbol of her generation and each suffered from the pressures of such status. Both were well-liked by people who worked with them. And each had Clark Gable as the same co-star in her last movie.

Jean was 26 when she died and starred only seven years on the screen. She once said: "Sex is fine on the screen—but a nuisance off it."

Her first marriage at 16, an elopement from a swank girl's school, lasted technically three years but was ended long before that.

Her marriage to Bern—like Monroe's marriage to playwright Arthur Miller—was experience in education. Bern, an intellectual, introduced her to fine books and art.

The year after his suicide, she eloped to Yuma, Ariz., with Hal Rosson, a cameraman. She divorced him in 1934.

Like Monroe, Jean was quick on the quips with Hollywood reporters. Yet, also like Monroe, she was basically shy.

Critics often panned her acting ability. She answered that with a statement that is quoted in Hollywood to this day:

"If audiences like you, you don't have to be an actress."

ACTED IN SILENTS

Jean got in the movies on a dare from a friend. She did bits in comedies with Laurel and Hardy and other top comics of the silent era.

About the same time, Howard Hughes started filming Hell's Angels, still one of the great aviation films of all time. The perfectionist millionaire spent three years making a silent movie — and then came the sound revolution.

Hughes scrapped the whole picture at a cost of a then-record $1,000,000. Ben Lyon and James Hall, the male stars, could talk but Greta Nissen, a sexy Norwegian, had too much accent for the talkies.

Landau was Jean's agent—and also Miss Nissen's. So Kansas City-born Jean got the part.

It was not a big part, but the audience saw plenty of Harlow and the picture made her an international celebrity. By 1930, this once unknown 19-year-old was 17th on a list of the 100 best known people in the world.

In the depths of the depression, she was the extrovert, fun-loving sex bomb who made her greatest hits opposite the screen's all-time star, Clark Gable.

She starred, too, with the Barrymores, Spencer Tracy, Robert Taylor, Wallace Beery, Lee Tracy, Franchot Tone, James Stewart, William Powell and a dozen more.

LIVED IN WHITE

She wore skintight dresses of white satin, white ostrich feathers and white mink, and drove a white Cadillac. On screen she always played a bad girl with a heart of gold.

Her pictures exploited her appeal with such titles as Platinum Blonde, Bombshell, Hold Your Man and Red Headed Woman, in which she dyed her famed platinum tresses.

Jean's best picture—one in which she was pitted against some of the screen's biggest scene stealers, Wallace Beery and Marie Dressler to game two—was Dinner at Eight. Her performance is one of the screen's classic comedy portrayals.

At her peak, Jean made $5,000 a week, at a time when taxes were low. But she left only $41,000.

Oldtimers say that of all the stars—save Gable—she was the easiest to know. Studio workers loved her.

In 1943, while making Reckless, she started going out with Powell. It was, according to friends, the great love of her life.

But Jean, never strong, soon was plagued with a series of illnesses—throat infections, kidney trouble, gall bladder infections and chronic colds.

Then came the illness that killed her. When uremic poisoning set in, Powell rode in the ambulance with Jean to Good Samaritan Hospital.

"But it was too late then," recalled Powell. "She was too far gone. She died in my arms. It was the saddest day of my life."

The date was June 7, 1937. Jean Harlow was only 26.

CUPID WINS AT HOSPITAL

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP)—Cupid apparently has won a battle at the Pontiac State Hospital as union employees were on the verge of striking a blow for love in the form of picket lines.

Picketing during off-duty hours was threatened by members of Local 49 of the Michigan State Employees Union on behalf of a nurse who contends she was laid off for dating a male attendant.

After consultation with state authorities, the hospital administrators relented and restored the nurse to her duties.

The 31-year-old nurse said she was warned by her superiors last month to break off her romance with Melvin Adams or quit her job.

"I refused to do either—and I told them my private life was none of their business," she said. In October, she received satisfactory rating for her work during her first two months on the job.

"But when I refused to stop seeing Mel or to resign, I was told that an unsatisfactory report would be drawn up and I would be dismissed."

The report and her dismissal notice came Dec. 4. That same night, the nurse, the former Frances Stockert, married the attendant

TEACHERS NEEDED

OTTAWA (CP) — Nearly 500 new teachers will be needed next year by 34 universities and colleges, the Canadian Universities Foundation said in a statement Saturday. The foundation is distributing a record list of vacant teaching posts, in subjects ranging from Canadian history to acoustics. It is estimated that Canadian universities and colleges will employ more than 2,500 teachers in all in 1965.

Opening lead — queen of hearts.

This hand appears in Bridge Writers' Choice 1964. It was played by Michael O'Connell and reported by Jack Kelly, both Irish international stars. Mr. Kelly is one of the 69 bridge writers who contributed to the book.

O'Connell was South. He won the heart lead with the ace and returned the king of spades. East took the ace, cashed the king of hearts, and returned a trump, won by the queen.

It would seem routine for declarer to take a diamond finesse at this point. This play would assure the contract if West had the king, or if East had the king and the diamonds were divided 3-3, or if West had the queen of clubs regardless of how the diamonds were distributed.

Counting all these factors, South would have been a heavy favorite to make the contract by taking the diamond finesse, but, in the actual hand, this method of play would have failed and South would have gone down one.

O'Connell improved on this method of play and made the contract as a result. He gave himself all the chances mentioned, but in addition also covered the possibility that East might have been dealt the singleton or doubleton king of diamonds. This added chance proved to be decisive.

O'Connell played a diamond to the ace at trick five, returned to his hand with a trump, and played a diamond to the queen. When this lost to the king, East found himself compelled to return a club or else yield a ruff and discard. Either play was bound to be fatal.

Note that O'Connell would have succeeded even if West had shown up with the king of diamonds. This would have insured an eventual club discard on the jack of diamonds.

Of course, some might say that O'Connell merely demonstrated the so-called luck of the Irish, but somehow or other we suspect that there was much more to what he did than that.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
