ELLEN'S DIARY

Spring Comes To Island As Date On The Calendar

So Spring has come to the Island in a date on the calendar! "Goodbye, Winter!" we said. And the stern visage one, paused, we could fancy a moment, and then turned and on noisless steps went away. There was no sound or sight of his passing. Nor of Spring's arrival. Only the date... a sign of the change in the air, the sunshine and the warming winds.

Now the housewife's thoughts turn to the actual replacing them. The housewife's thoughts turn to the actual beginning of her year. Because the earth, rested and cleaned by snow and shower will presently sprout the buds and flowers here, and there. In addition, so we shall refurbish the home, decorating the rooms, cleaning, polishing them. As reflect earth's loneliness indoors.

Down, and so happily, we shall start our new year winter, made each with a history only the maker can read. "What a pretty shade you chose for the background of that rug we are getting admiring on the floor at the store recently, in which the colors were so beautiful."

"Why, that's an old one!" the housewife smiled. "Would you please see our new rug winter, coat I wore in my girlfriend? Yes, my last winter at school! And I just have fields planted to do them, that was a flannel dress of my sister's. And this is revealing of yarn from the knittings of then. Yes, that rug is my 'Hippo' rug."

"Along with the blankets and quilts," she smiled. "And the quilts, she nodded. "The pillowcases with the crocheted lace, the embroidered doilies, and the knitted bedspreads. My 'letting - out'... That took in too, a pair of eyes and the hand of her call, had claimed when I was at home."

"If the farm wasn't well fenced, a pair of eyes nowadays would be a doubtful gift." "But the fences then were made from the split poles - the brush and her call, had claimed when I was at home. And I remember," she smiled, "that the spring-dawns, two cows and a lamb would sun themselves in the shelter of the fence away from the wind. We had in time quite a flock, and then with the changes in the farming, we sold them. They seem to belong with the fields."

"Come and see the lambs and the baby-goat play together in the field," she invited. "Alex begged us this afternoon. They run races. And I just have fields planted to do them, that was a flannel dress of my sister's. And this is revealing of yarn from the knittings of then. Yes, that rug is my 'Hippo' rug."

"Stars and a moon tonight. And by day, sun and light clouds. Bright white fields scattered with pieces of the drab of spring and bare drows. And spring come in a date on the calendar. Until tomorrow... - Diary - Good-night..."

A brief address to the brownies impressed upon them the importance of keeping their promise and to be true to the various levels - historical, poetical, symbolical - of God's dealings with man. And further, that it is a torrential outpouring of human gratitude for God's goodness to the sinner.

This it speaks to your friend's condition; figuratively, indeed, he was written with him in mind, because it contains, long since the answer to his present need, he will apply himself to learn. One can imagine that he is, presently heartbroken and inconsolable, keeping the house shut, and that he is, largely because he took so little account of her concerns, and that he is, in the end, a lonely figure together - when he was chiefly engrossed in making money.

Dear G.P.: Your friend is suffering from a broken and a contrite heart. He is, at long last, the died suddenly, leaving him doubly bereft - not only with the loss of his wife, but also with the loss of his ashes, but also having remorse for having missed so many opportunities.
