Russia May Provide Stiff Competition In Aviation

By DAVE OANCIA
Canadian Press Staff Writer

MONTREAL, — (CP) —A United Nations report hints the free world's aviation industry may be in for some rough competition from the Soviet Union.

Aviation sources here concede privately that chaos could result if Russia successfully enters the big league in a field where competition already is extremely keen.

Passing reference was made to the Soviet air industry and air transport in a report on the economic implications of long-range jets prepared by the International Civic Aviation Organization in Montreal.

The UN organization said it was excluding Russian planes and air transport from consideration because not enough reliable information on Soviet planes was available and because they have never been used in competition on the world's markets.

LIKELY EFFECT PROFOUND

"Nevertheless, it should be borne in mind that if they were ever offered for sale in quantity and at attractive prices, and particularly if their operating costs are as low as they have been claimed to be, they could have a profound effect on world air transport," the UN report said.

The Soviet Union provides little technical data on its air industry. It is neither a member of ICAO or the International Air Transport Association, which represents most airlines.

Russia's aeroflot is the world's biggest, most complex and least-known aerial organization. Studies by Western experts show it is more than an airline.

It's the total weight of Russian civil aviation. Everything that moves in the air and is not military is Aeroflot. It does jobs ranging from tree seeding to ambulance service and long-range transport.

The Air Transport Association of America, representing the U. S. airlines, discussed it this way:

"After laboring quietly in their own backyard for years, the Russian airline burst out of its self-imposed annymity with a suddenness that caught the West unprepared.

RIVAL WEST'S BEST

"In a few short years, the Soviets have built new turbine-powered aircraft that rival the best in the West and have begun to extend their air routes to all parts of the world."

The West did not pay much attention to Russian transport planes until March 1956, when the TU-104 pure jet was unveiled at London Airport. This was a twin-jet, medium range aircraft based on the design of the Red air force's badger bomber.

Six months later this plane was put into service and the Russians were able to boast that Aeroflot was the only airline offering regular service in pure jet aircraft. Western airlines now are reaching the point where they too can claim jet service.

But the Soviets are not staking their claim to air transport superiority on the TU-104. The ICAO report shows at least five or six modern turbine transports in various stages of development. If Russian claims are true, they will make the TU-104 seem almost obsolete by comparison.

Eight Years Since Blood Clinic Held At Murray R.

It is now almost eight years since the residents of the Murray River area have had an opportunity to attend a Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic in their own locality although many have been regular attendants at the Annual Clinic in Montague.

On Thursday afternoon, August 28th.. a Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic will be held in the basement of the school at Murray River between 2 and 4 with an objective of 100 donors.

Mr. George Ferguson, chairman of the Red Cross blood donor committee for Murray River, reports that he has enthusiastic canvassers at work in every district in the area and that he feels confident there will be a good attendance at the Murray River clinic.

Montague Legion Has Plans Finalized For Blood Clinic

On Thursday evening of this week all roads in the area will lead to the Beaver Club Hall in Montague where another Legion-sponsored Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic will be held between 8 and 10 o'clock. The objective for this year's Clinic at Montague is again 175, and the chairman, Mr. George A. MacCannell, is confident that last year's record attendance of 206 on a quota of 175, can be surpassed next Wednesday evening.

Residents in the Southern Kings section of the province will have an opportunity of attending either the Murray River Clinic on Thursday afternoon, or the Montague clinic at night — whichever is the more convenient for the donors. All previous donors are urged to try to bring new donors to the Clinic with them and in this way help to boost the attendance. Those who can no longer be donors because of medical or other reasons should continue to lend their support by being "boosters" and inducing others to attend the clinics.

Committee Work Is Not Always So Well Published

By John A. MacDonald, M.P.

A part of the duties of a Member of Parliament which often receives little recognition is the work done by Standing and Special Committees of the House. These committees usually sit while the House is not in session and often they take up a considerable amount of the time of the Member. Sometimes, if the business is urgent, they may even sit at the same time as the House is in session but this is avoided wherever possible. The proceedings in the committees, which are more informal and of course on a smaller scale than the sittings of the House, are usually very interesting.

Generally, those chosen to sit on the committees are experts in the field, and there is great latitude in the calling of highly qualified Civil Servants or other witnesses for the purposes required. The estimates of the Department concerned are screened in these committees which saves time when the estimates must be passed later on the floor of the House since Members have an opportunity in committee to go over the estimates thoroughly.

In this session it was my privilege to be appointed to the new Standing Committee, that of Veterans Affairs, as well as serving on the Fisheries and Public Accounts Committees. In addition to that, I have sat in on a number of other committees as time permitted and especially those on Agriculture, External Affairs and Estimates. This gives one a good knowledge of what is going on in the various Departments and an opportunity to participate in the debates of the committees to which one is assigned as a member.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

The committee which has, of course, drawn the most attention this session is that of Public Accounts. For the past number of years, when in opposition, Prime Minister Diefenbaker and other members of the opposition, have strongly advocated a set-up similar to that which functions at the House of Commons in London. There the Public Accounts Committee is chaired by a member of the opposition and the subject matter to be taken up is decided by a steering committee.

This year, after considerable discussion, the Public Accounts Committee in our Parliament was set up on the same basis. It began with a routine consideration of the Report of the independent auditor, Mr. Watson Sellar, which is published at the back of the Public Accounts Blue Book. Mr. Sellar is a top ranking Civil Servant with a staff whose sole duty is to check over financial transactions of the Government and ferret out any instances of wrongful procedures or apparent misuse of government funds.

This he does with considerable success, and the various items contained in his report make very interesting reading and very often draw attention to unnecessary flaws in administration. Early in its sittings, the committee decided that they would investigate the construction of the Printing Bureau at Hull.

This project has drawn daily headlines in the papers, and is a sad story of waste and extravagance from the beginning. Even the excavation, on which a tender was awarded for $55,000, yielded the contractor $238,695. Purchase of the land in a poor area of Hull amounted to over $1,800,000. The cost per acre was in excess of $13,000. In the beginning the cost of the building was estimated at something over $6,000,000. The final cost turned out to be over $16,000,000.

There is a stream of water running through the sub-basement Temperatures in some rooms in the building, when the committee visited it, were up to 94 per cent. An Expensive air-conditioning system installed in the building is almost useless and it is estimated that it will take another $800,000 to make the system work.

Experienced contractors estimate that there is twenty-five per cent waste space in the building. Senator Fournier, the Mayor of Montreal, tried to have the Deputy Minister, who came in about the time the equipment was being transferred from the old building to the new one in Hull, fired because he would not give the moving contract to a Montreal firm whose tender was twice as much as that of an Ottawa one.

The story goes on and on in this manner with the official opposition desperately stalling for time so that as little as possible can be investigated. What the final outcome will be is unknown but the record is a sad one as far as government expenditure is concerned.

EMERGENCY PLANS:

In the otherwise quite debate on the Supply Estimates, under the heading of "Privy Council", the Prime Minister introduced a subject which is of considerable interest and import to all our citizens; namely, emergency defence measures in case of nuclear war.

Those of us with military backgrounds have been following the defence picture closely and noted the many considerations which must be given not only to the armed forces but to the whole conduct of government in the event of nuclear attack.

Not only will a civil defence program, which is now being scrutinized very carefully by the former Chief-of-Staff, Lt. Gen. Graham, be of vital importance in this planning but every department of government will be drawn into the picture.

Hence, it was very revealing and satisfying to note that the government has gone into this important program thoroughly and has taken adequate steps to ensure its proper collaberation and cooperation between the armed forces, civil defence organizations, the R.C.M.P. and all the different departments of government, not only in our own country but this cooperation will extend to similar planning groups in the United Kingdom, the United States and other countries.

In order to ensure that the over-all set up will be satisfactory, regional and zonal elements will be established in different parts of Canada where propery organized groups can handle the local situation. This will provide a concept of a decentralized federal system of emergency government in which provincial and municipal governments will be closely allied with the federal. Little has been said about such a program for such eventualities it is gratifying to know that definite planning is being carried out for this purpose.

NEARING THE END:

Government legislation on the Order Paper has now reached a stage where the outlook for a closing by the end. or before the end of this month is a strong possibility. Estimates have been going through faster than expected in the past few days and only a few bills of importance are still to be debated. One is the new bill to revamp the C.B.C. by the setting up of a new Board, and another one which is still to be mentioned is the Bill of Rights.

Both of these measures are of considerable importance and have been the subject of prolonged debates in the House and throughout the country on previous occasions but it seems that they will probably pass with a minimum of debate this session.

The External Affairs debate on the first item of the Estimates saw Hon. Sidney Smith from the United Nations to report on the developments of the past few weeks which have occupied him there. It was a quiet debate with many views being expressed and the Minister giving a very good acount of his stewardship.

Many members are hoping to be home for the Labor Day holiday when they will be needed to arrange for schooling, etc. It has been a long hot summer in Ottawa and it will be a pleasant charge to get back to our home areas.
