POETRY.

SPRING VERSES.

The gleam of the golden sunshine
Falls on the hill-tops now,
As the west wind woos the blossoms
On rose and lilac bough.

Pale, delicate snow-drops glisten
Like pearls in morning-dew;
The violet's royal purple
Glows in the hedge anew.

Through emerald forest dingles
The merry brook doth bound,
And the hawthorn's sweet bloom lieth
Like snow upon the ground.

And summer with all her splendour
Will crown the blushing day,
When the hopeful hours of spring-tide
Have smiled, and pased away!

But the brook is murmuring sadly
"I do not see her face,
I have sung to her unweary—
Summer comes on space."

And the roses by the casement
Ask for her praise in vain,
And the rustling trees are sighing,
"She comes not nigh again!"

Home hath lost a radiant presence—
My sweet life flower lies dead,
And hope holdeth "torch inverted"
Over her grave instead!

The blossoms of life's fair summer—
Brief is their bloom and stay;
Full short is the happy season
Ere comes the autumn day

Oh! sorrowing hearts, the spring-time
Speaks not of joy to ye;
To some the glory and sunshine
For aye hath cased to be.

WHEN WILL THE WINTER PASS AWAY?

Oh, glorious Queen of the halcyon year!
By vernal paths of the joyous Spring,
On rosy footsteps, my love, draw near;
Oh, haste, sweet Summer! hasten and bring
The warmth that lives in the sunbeam's light,
And the dews, which drop from thy lips at night.

Oh, hasten with showers of silver rain,
Bright, flashing rain from the skies above,
To ripen the fields of bearded grain,
And teach us the lesson of God's great love!
Oh, glorious Summer, Queen of the year,
On the viewless pinions of Time draw near!

With crimson and gold will the sunsets burn
Far down in the West at the close of day;
Oh, haste, sweet Summer, haste to return!
Ah, when will the Winter pass away?
My heart with a passion yearning longs
For the beautiful flowers and the birds' gay songs.

A telegram from San Francisco states that on the evening of the 19th ult. a large public meeting was held at Victoria, V. I., for the purpose of discussing the propriety of applying for the admission of the colony into the British North American Confederacy. The meeting was unanimously in favor of the scheme, and steps will be taken at once to confer with the Imperial Government on the subject.

NEW MARKETS FOR FISH.—The Montreal Trade Review says:—

"We would wish to call special attention to the great importance of opening up new markets for the production of our fisheries. England, and the London market, especially, affords an opening for the sale of an almost unlimited quantity of fish. Vast quantities of mackerel packed in ice are even now brought from the distant coasts of Norway and Sweden, and the day may yet come when, by the aid of a regular steam service, fresh fish from the Gulf of St. Lawrence will be found in the London market. But it will be sufficient to confine our attention for the present to cured fish, and all that is required to secure a market for this article in England is greater attention to the methods of curing. Our herrings are practically valueless in the English markets, not because the fish are inferior, but simply because they are spoiled in the process of curing. By far the larger proportion of the herrings sold in the London market are lightly cured, and packed in baskets containing 150 each, 330,000 of these baskets are sold every year in London alone; while the demand for smoked haddocks, or finnan haddies, as they are sometimes called, is practically unlimited. In these two kinds of fish alone, a vast business might be done if only the proper amount of attention were given for preparing them for the market. Steam is already extensively used in the prosecution of the North Sea Fishery, and if our people would give their attention to this subject, which its importance deserves, there might soon be a fleet of vessels employed in the trade, and another outlet secured for this important branch of our national industry."

It is said that upwards of 300,000 persons are now in a starving condition in the Southern States. Steps are being taken in New York and elsewhere with a view to their relief.
