A-Bomb Dropped On Japan Caused Leukemia Increase

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)—Atomic bombs dropped on Japan in 1945 caused a marked rise in leukemia and a probable rise in thyroid cancer but no increase in malformed babies, a Yale University researcher said here.

Dr. Stuart C. Finch, associate professor of medicine, said a study of pregnancies in Hiroshima showed no more birth defects among babies of blast survivors than among offspring of non-exposed parents.

The only genetic effect observed was a change in the boy-girl ratio among babies born to survivors exposed to radiation, he said. If the father was irradiated, the probability for a boy increased, he explained. The probability for a girl increased if the mother was irradiated.

Finch recently returned from Japan after serving two years as chief of medicine for the U.S. Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission. The commission was set up by former president Truman to study the long-range effects of the blasts in Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

CANCER INCREASED

Another Yale faculty member, Dr. Dorothy R. Hollingsworth, studied thyroid cancer in bomb survivors and found this type of cancer probably increased because of the intense radiation.

Finch said the number of survivors who came down with cancer or suffered other after-effects was proportionately small.

Commission doctors found that radiation caused the number of leukemia cases among survivors to soar to 30 to 50 times normal in 1951-52, Finch said.

The rate has declined in recent years, but is still two or three times normal, he added. The incidence of leukemia (blood cancer) was related by the researchers to the radiation dose received.

London Paper Is Critical U.S. Refuses Ban Proposal

LONDON (Reuters) — The Times says in an editorial the United States was flouting "military and scientific logic" by refusing to accept the Soviet offer of three on-site nuclear inspections a year.

The newspaper criticizes both the united States and the Soviet attitudes towards the Geneva nuclear test ban negotiations, and urges Britain to make a positive move to break the current deadlock.

The Times says:

"A plague on both their houses is not too harsh a fate to wish upon the principals in the prolonged wrangle over nuclear tests."

"The positions taken up by the United States and the Soviet Union no longer mean much in scientific or military terms.

"It is time that the British representative in Geneva gave notice that at least one nuclear power is exasperated by the endless and apparently fruitless discussion.

"It can do no harm and it might achieve much to make clear to the Americans that to continue to reject the offer of three inspections is to fly in the face of military and scientific logic; and to the Russians that such an acceptance would obviously justify a more reasonable attitude on their side towards the terms of inspection and the number of seismic detection stations."

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
Pass	1 NT	Pass	3 NT

Opening lead—five of clubs.

The declarer's first aim is to make the contract. In attempting this goal, he brushes aside those hands the opponents may have that would render the contract unmakable and concentrates instead on hands that permit the contract to be made.

Furthermore, in planning the play, he pays little attention to the accumulation of overtricks, since the value of a game, or a slam, or even a part score, far exceeds the value of an overtrick.

This principle of ignoring overtricks and concentrating on the contract is demonstrated in the play of the accompanying hand.

South is in three notrump and West leads a club. East takes the king and returns a club to the ace, and West continues with a club which South wins, East discarding a spade. How should declarer proceed?

It is no doubt true that many players would enter dummy at this point with a heart or a spade in order to lead the queen of diamonds and finesse. If they did this, they would go down in the actual hand, because West would take the king and cash his clubs to defeat the contract one trick.

However, this line of play is wrong. It is all right to go to dummy and lead the queen of diamonds, but it is wrong to finesse. Instead, declarer should go up with the ace.

As it happens, the ace catches the king and South winds up making five notrump, but the fact that this occurs in the present case does not by itself prove the play is right. There is a far better reason than hindsight for making the play.

If East has the king, declarer still makes four notrump by continuing with diamonds, and all it costs him to refuse the finesse is a 30-point trick.

But if West has the king, the finesse always loses the contract, while the ace play wins the contract whenever West's king is a singleton. This latter possibility is something that declarer is duty-bound to protect against.
