OUR BOARDING HOUSE MAJOR HOOPLE OUT OUR WAY BY J. R. WILLIAMS

CONTRACT BRIDGE By B. JAY BECKER

twelfth. As can be observed by examining West's hand, the three finesses which are available to South will all lose if attempted. However, we cannot hold South responsible in any way for failing to know a finesses will lose, since West is notorious as a payer who keeps his cards close to his chest.

Rather the question is whether normal play should produce twelve tricks not knowing which opponent has any or all of the key cards. Our answer is yes. Correct play will achieve the desired result in this deal.

South should cash four diamond tricks immediately, discarding a club from his own hand and another from dummy. The club is discarded for consumption of the clubs is that South does not want to be pressed for a discard on the fourth club.

At this point a spade is played from dummy and the ten is offered for consumption. West wins with the Jack but finds he must return a spade into declarer's A-Q. Either play presents declarer with his twelfth trick.

Of course, it is lucky West does not have a club to return, but this is the kind of luck which the elaborate preparatory steps taken by South make possible. Even if West had had another club, South would have been no worse off if he had played from the beginning for outright finesses.

South dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

Opening lead—ten of diamonds.
The question before the court today is how South should play his cards, and dummy's, in the six notrump contract.

There is no use discussing the bidding, because it is obvious that South was telling the truth when he bid two notrump, thereby showing a balanced hand with 22 to 24 points, and North, who had no better than a grammar school education, simply added his 11 points to South's and was sure the combined holding came to at least 33.

Declarer started with eleven sure tricks. The problem is to find the surest way to obtain a

BEDTIME STORIES

So Near And Yet So Far

Not wonderful are things you know!
'Tis lack of knowledge makes them so.
—Old Mother Nature.

Peter Rabbit was becoming venturesome. There was still a crust covering the snow and it was easy for Peter to get about on it. This night Peter had gone over to Farmer Brown's garden. Of course it wasn't really a garden now, for there were not growing things, there were just a few rows of plants, a few minutes. Being over to rest for a few minutes. Being over to rest for a few minutes. Being over to rest for a few minutes.

He had found out that Jerry and Mrs. Jerry Muskrat liked winter. They could sleep in comfort when they wanted to, have plenty to eat, and didn't care what the weather was. He had found it was the same way with Chatterer the Red Squirrel and his cousins. He had discovered that Danny and Nanny Meadow Mouse were never so safe and happy as when the snow lay deep on the Green Meadows. He knew that Johnny Chuck slept through the winter deep down in the ground. He didn't even have to wake up to eat. But there were some Peter wasn't quite sure about and he wondered. One of these was Old Mr. Toad.

Now if Old Mr. Toad could have heard Peter then I am sure he would have chuckled. He would have thought it a great joke. In a way it really was a joke. You see at that very minute Peter was sitting right on Old Mr. Toad. Perhaps I should say he was sitting right over Old Mr. Toad. The latter was fast asleep deep down in the ground right beneath Peter. He was as near as that. And at the same time he was several months away.

Peter was learning much these days. For some folks in the Green Forest and on the Green Meadows, including Peter himself, winter brought hard times. For others they were not hard times at all, and this Peter was finding out.

"Of course I know that Old Mr. Toad sleeps somewhere all winter, but I wish I knew where. Grandfather Frog, who is Old Mr. Toad's cousin, sleeps all winter down in the mud at the bottom of the Smiling Pool. I don't know how he does it, but he says that is what he does and I suppose it must be so. I suppose Snapper the Turtle is down there with him. But, Old Mr. Toad doesn't go to the Smiling Pool until Spring. He says he digs in for the winter, but where does he do it and how does he do it?" thought Peter as he sat there in Farmer Brown's garden.

It certainly didn't look like a place where anybody could be sleeping the long cold months of winter. Yet right in that very garden down in the hard ground under the snow, were many sleepers. There were insects of many kinds, all sleeping the winter away. And there, right under Peter, was Old Mr. Toad.

Had Peter happened over in that garden just before the coming of Jack Frost he might have seen Old Mr. Toad going to bed. Of course it isn't polite to watch folks go to bed, but Peter would have found it interesting if he had been there. Just what made Old Mr. Toad choose that exact spot probably he himself didn't know. Perhaps he just decided to go to bed and one place seemed as good as another. Anyway, he began to dig with his hind feet. He didn't hurry. As he dug, he backed down in. He kept on doing it and didn't mind at all when the earth fell in on him. He kept on reaching him. There he stopped digging, went to sleep, and there he was right under Peter.

Exodus Is Taking Place From United Kingdom As Year Ends

By EDDY GILMORE

LONDON (AP)—A great exodus is under way from this country where wages are low, taxes high, prices rising and automobiles shy of gasoline.

Thousands of United Kingdom residents have packed bags and gone to Canada, Australia, New Zealand and Rhodesia. Thousands of others daily are asking how to get to those faraway lands.

"The greatest scuttles in history," said one newspaper.

"The rush is fantastic," said an official at Canada's immigration office. "We've never had anything like it."

Immigration officer L. G. Cumming has to leave his desk, act as a doorman, handle the long lines of people and answer dozens of questions on the spot.

FORM QUEUE
For several days this month the line of applicants spilled out of the immigration offices in a line 50 yards down a side street.

Other Commonwealth countries are pressed, too.

"We are flooded with applications by telephone, letter and personal inquiries," Australia's immigration office reported.

"I've been here since the end of the war," said a clerk at New Zealand's headquarters. "And there has never been anything like this."

"There has never been a time when so many people wanted to leave Britain," said The Daily Mail.

Australia House handled more than 5,000 applications for entry in one week.

"We haven't totted them up," said a Canadian official, "but I estimate we are getting 10,000 inquiries a week with a large percentage of them turning into requests for entry."

Immigration queues have been swelling at the Commonwealth offices since last January, but the big get-out rush started Dec. 5. That was one day after the chancellor of the exchequer, Harold Macmillan, announced gasoline was going up to about 20 cents a gallon because of the oil shortage caused by the Suez Canal blockade. He also hinted that the income tax might go up if things get worse. British income taxes already are the highest in the world.

A 100-per-cent tax on luxury items, including automobiles, stiffened restrictions on installment buying and the generally low salaries all contribute to the lure of living in other countries of the Commonwealth. In addition there is a widespread feeling among young people that Britain no longer is a land of opportunity.
