it, but for a well-balanced social life, during which a girl can learn to evaluate the good and bad qualities of her friends.

GIRL LEARNS MUCH

You might raise the objection that marriage is not fundamentally a question of evaluation; it is usually purely and simply the result of "falling in love." True, but if a girl has learned to appreciate and expect courtesy, consideration and reliability in a boy, that's the kind of man she will in all probability fall in love with. That's the kind of a man she will marry!

Much more likely to be divorce court material is the girl who, lacking all appreciation of finer masculine qualities or any basis of comparison, marries the first man who proposes simply because he's male! These are the women who become dissatisfied with their hasty choices and are easy prey for every roving Romeo.

I am certainly not suggesting that a girl's dating should be indiscriminate, but neither should it be numerically restricted. Quality, not quantity, should be the first object always.

There is no insincerity involved in a girl making her "date" feel important. In the vast majority of cases, he is important to her, and for the moment, at least, very much the "only one." Learning to make the other half of a two-way conversation feel important is one of the social graces we all have to learn. Whether it's a first date, a business associate or a fellow club-woman, at the moment of contact he or she is entitled to our entire attention and interest.

Group activity should, as you suggest, be given more promotion by schools and churches. In this instance, I think the church has an even greater part to play and one that is too often neglected. However, "dating" will ultimately be an outgrowth of such activity anyway, at least until the realm of human emotion changes considerably. If you are a parent, A. F., learn to guide your children wisely through the dating years. Dates are, I might add, a delight to the youngsters but an awful headache to parents!

Ellen's Diary

But James said: "No, we'll have a hundred uses for it—and besides, there's nothing wrong with the old one!" There was a supply of remedies in the event of recognized ills about sties, or stables; reduced iron for piglets; mineral for porcine mothers-to-be; insecticides which pertain to the less glamorous but nonetheless important side of farming; a prescribed dose for a ewe, "not doing so well."

"There was a lamb's feeding-nipple in case some of the new-born may need supplementary milk; the same item too, for piglets and intriguing rings to decorate the respective noses of the heads of bovine heads here and at Rob's. And that," James commented, in prospect, "will be one d--l of a job!"

"Did you hear what he said?" granddaughter asked aghast—then giggled. "I guess," she conceded "it's all right for men to say that!" "And this, Ellen, now where will I put it—to know just exactly where I can find it?" That was some smallish extras and bolts likely to cause us some bewilderment on a day ahead when James hurries in to ask: "Where is that parcel, Ellen—you remember I gave it to you to put away? Now don't tell me you've forgotten . . . I might have known . . . and we wanting something from it this very minute!"

And today . . . the "common round": a first white-faced lamb-kin; sows moved to farrowing pens; piglets weaned . . . and "business as usual" at Alderlea.

Until tomorrow—Diary—Good-night

practice of sowing three different types of the main vegetable, an early maturing sort, a medium one and a late one. This is particularly sound policy with such things as garden peas and corn, as the former must go in fairly early to get a start during the cool weather and the latter is not safe much before danger from the last frost is over.

Specialties

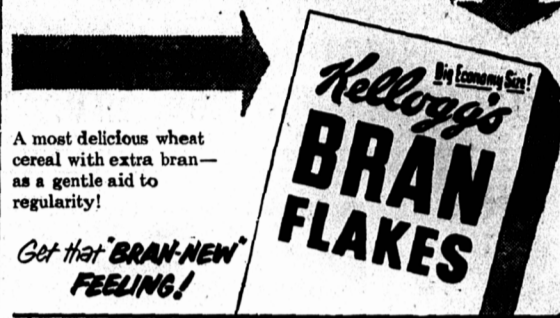

One of the best things about gardening is the wide range of special interests.

Anyone can soon become an expert along certain lines of his own choosing. Some people like to concentrate on rock gardens, others on window boxes or an extra fine lawn of, say bent grass. Others go in for rare dwarf plants or special borders of various distinctive colors. Still others accept the challenge of shaded quarters and with tuberous begonias and other plants that actually prefer to keep away from the sun, they make a brilliant showing. The seed catalogues will help in choosing plants for any of these special purposes and, of course, for the more advanced there are all sorts of other literature. It gives one quite a thrill to be pointed out as "That's the person on our street or in our town who grows the best of this or that."

Avoid these

Two of the commonest mistakes of the new gardener are planting too close together and too deeply. When sowing one should always try and picture the resulting plants. Even tiny flowers like alyssum or portulaca, things that are only an inch or so high at full maturity, will require room. The safe rule is about at least half as much space between as they are high when full grown. With small flowers and vegetables this means at least a couple of inches and with say, zinnias, peas, beans, etc. four to six inches. With dahlias and while such things as beans and corn this should be 12 to 18 inches deep. A few very tall flowers like gladiolus and dahlias should go from six to twelve inches. Really Tender Vegetables.
