FACTS

It is a fact that we have the best assortment of Midsummer Readymade Clothing in the City This stock has been selected from nice new patterns of tweeds, made up in the latest styles, and are being sold at prices that leave hard times out of the question.

It is a Fact

That we have these goods also in youth's and boys' sizes. Prices corresponding to size—and size for everyone. Our advice would be to see these goods. We are satisfied that for design and price they are not equaled in the city.

It is also a Fact

That if Readymades are not good enough for you we can turn out to your order, the leading custom made goods of the city. Our custom department excells all others in the newness and amount of cloths shown, and in the class of workmen employed.

PLUMBING AND HEATING

Now is the time to have your house heated and plumbed, for in the fall it will be too late, as everybody will be in a rush then and it will cost you a great deal more. So if you are contemplating having any of the above work done, we are prepared to give satisfaction in all its branches at a very low figure. Remember we do all our own work, and can afford to do it cheaper than any others in the business. We thoroughly understand every detail of our business. Jobbing done at short notice. Lawnmowers and other machinery repaired. We also handle the National Dish Washer. Washes, rinses and dries the dishes perfectly of either large or small family in from one to five minutes. No labour, no mess, no slop, no wetting of hands or spoiling of clothes; no broken or chipped dishes, no wiping necessary. Will produce a finer polish than can be done by hand. It is well and durably made of sheet steel, galvanized making it strong and substantial. Best of references.

REALITY IS THE GREAT EDUCATOR

Life is the Oldest and Best Endowed University in the World.

Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D., writes on "Substitutes for a College Training" in June Ladies' Home Journal, which makes a most acceptable contribution to his series of papers to young men, an especially practical one in supplementing his article on the value of college training in the May issue of that magazine. Dr. Parkhurst asserts that "there is a certain keenness and vigor of discipline that can come to a man only as he lives out in the midst of things and becomes himself a part of the world and of the events with which the world is so solidly packed. Those to whom my words are particularly addressed are young men who are anxious to make themselves felt in the world, and to such it needs to be said that we best learn how to do by doing. A sense of opportunity, a feeling of being a part, even a minute part, of the machinery by which the threads of current events are being woven in, works upon us with the power of a fine discipline and a strong inspiration. The solidity of the burden that is carried helps to solidify the man who carries it. Problems tumble easily apart in the field that refuse to give up their secret in the study or even in the closet. Reality is what educates us, and reality never comes so close to us with all its powers of discipline as when we encounter it in action. In books we find truth in black and white, but in the onrush of events we see truth at work; and it is only when truth is busy, and when we are ourselves personally mixed up in its activities, that we learn to know of how much we are capable, or win the power by which those capabilities can be made over into effect. Let no young man, then, of spirit and purpose be dismayed by his inability to attend either college or university. Life is itself the oldest and best endowed university in the world, and will guarantee to its pupils all in the way of vigor, keenness and grasp that they have in them the grace and persistency to acquire."

Worthless Antiquities.

Owners of creole antiquities and relics in Louisiana have just received an unpleasant shock. Several northern dealers in antiquities and bric-a-brac rummaged among the creole households of Louisiana a few years ago and unearthed and carried off almost priceless treasures, mainly in chinaware and furniture, brought here by the early French settlers, who were generally cadets of good family or emigres during the early days of the French revolution. Two New Orleans bankers who thought that there were still more important art treasures hidden here, "blushing unseen," started, some five years ago, to make a collection of paintings brought over by the early French settlers. A connoisseur, who took charge of the paintings, was certain that there were some really valuable ones among these family heirlooms. The collection, which has been steadily growing for the past five years, was shipped to Paris a few weeks ago, as it was thought that the paintings would bring better prices there, besides being "authenticated." A cable message has exploded the bubble. The French critics pronounce the paintings "no good," and not genuine, and they will be shipped back to New Orleans if they are worth the expense of shipping. Those who are "out" on this art transaction are unable to understand why the French emigres cling to paintings which were of no value whatever, for there is no question of their having been brought over here and treasured, many of them for over a century, in creole families. The emigres, at least those who went to Louisiana, were evidently not good judges of art.—Harper's Weekly.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Stumbling-Blocks in Grammar.

I suppose hardly any one who has ever written twenty pages of English will deny that this want of a genderless pronoun for the third person singular is the greatest defect of our language and one that has never been successfully supplied, and never will be till the common sense of the people steps in and overrides by its flat the decrees of the authorities. The clumsy makeshift, "his or her," has been as persistently rejected by the language instinct of our race as it has been urged by grammarians, and the critics may shout themselves hoarse telling us that in such cases the masculine pronoun is to be regarded as including both genders; the language sense of the average English-speaking person will never tolerate its intrusion in such a sentence as this: "Either the husband or the wife will change his opinion." Nine people out of ten, nay, ninety-nine out of a hundred, if they haven't the fear of the schoolmaster before their eyes, will say, in such a case, "either the husband or the wife will change their opinion." In fact, this usage is now so common in conversation that it may almost be said to have become a well-established colloquialism, and examples of it can frequently be found in the best writers. Ruskin never hesitates to employ it when it suits his convenience to do so. Fielding does the same, as, for example, "Nobody knows what it is to lose a friend till they have lost him," and, although I am not very familiar with the writings of Charles Reade here is an instance of the same sort taken at random from him: "Everybody was on deck amusing themselves as best they could."

This usage points us to the only practical way out of the difficulty. The Queen's English must step down from its throne when the sovereign people take it in hand.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS IN LOVE.

The First Right She Expects is to be Treated Better Than Anybody Else.

Woman's rights! Why the very first right we expect is to be treated better than anybody else—better than men treat each other as a body, and better by the individual man than he treats all other women. I abominate the idea of equality and to be mentally slapped on the shoulder and told I am "a good fellow." I shrink from the idea of independence and cold, proud isolation with my emancipated sister-women, who struggle into their own coats unassisted, and get red in the face putting on their own skates, and hang on to a strap in the street car in the proud consciousness that they are independent and the equals of men. I never worry myself when a man is on his knees in front of me putting on my overshoes, as to whether he considers me his equal politically or not. It is sufficient satisfaction for me to see him there. If he hadn't wanted to save me the trouble I suppose he wouldn't have offered. He may even think I am strong enough for such an arduous duty. That wouldn't hurt my feelings either. I have an idea that he likes it better to think that I cannot do anything troublesome for myself than to believe that I could get along perfectly without him. In fact—here's her say for you, oh, ye emancipated—I do not in the least mind being dependent on men—provided the men are nice enough. Let them give us all the so-called rights they want to. I shall never get over wanting to get behind some man if I see a cow. Let them give us a vote if they will. I shall want at least three men to go with me to the polls—one to hold my purse, one to hold my gloves, and the third to show me how to cast my vote.—Lillian Bell in June Ladies' Home Journal.

A Sad Mistake.

Mrs. Foster was from New England, and regarded life very seriously, never shirking or turning back from the path of duty which lay before her, but she never realized that French was at all necessary until she visited Paris. Then she had to rely on a phrasebook, which relieved her mind of all care, but greatly exercised the mental powers of the natives with whom she came in contact. Her nephew, who was studying art in the French capital, secured for her an invitation to a reception given by a famous French artist. Mrs. Foster went, accompanied by her nephew (and the phrase-book). She thought she knew just where to open it and read her lines. She was introduced in French to the artist. He spoke in French, her nephew replied in French, until the dear old lady got bewildered. But she felt that she must say something, so she opened the inevitable book and read off the first sentence which met her eye, giving it the true New Hampshire twang. The artist smiled sweetly, but as Mrs. Foster saw the translation in italics after the sentence she nearly fainted. As her nephew led her away, however, he congratulated her upon her introduction and her knowledge of the language.

"But, Henry," cried his horrified aunt, "did you hear what I said? I asked him how soon could we get something to eat—that's what I asked him—in French."

Her nephew smiled; he would have liked to laugh. "Oh!" he replied. "Did you? Well, auntie, it doesn't matter, for he asked me what in thunder you said, and I told him I didn't know."

LOVE OF A DAY.

The library at Ardenvohr, the residence of the Stuart-Grahams.

Mabel Stuart-Graham, only daughter, standing near the fireplace. Maxwell Leith, tutor to the house of Graham, seated writing at a center table. Heads of the house dining out. Time, 8:30 p.m.

She (drumming impatiently on the mantel-piece and glancing in his direction)—You don't seem to care that this is my last evening—that I am going away to-morrow—that I shan't be back at Ardenvohr for months.

He—It would be generally supposed that you are to be envied. You are going out into the world. You have life before you with all its possibilities.

She (with an inflection of asperity in her voice)—I wish you would not speak so much like a copy book. What you say may be true enough. I have a box full of new clothes upstairs most girls would covet, and yet— yet —(flinging herself impatiently into a chair and glancing covertly at him)—I would a thousand times rather be putting on my old serge gown and be sitting down to Horace.

He (still writing)—That feeling will wear off. You will enjoy the novelty of the new life. You will get fresh interests. You will be admired.

She (pouting)—I don't want fresh interests. I don't care—(significantly) for the admiration of the multitude.

(Silence, except for the scratching of his pen).

She (rising and going to the table near him)—What are you writing?

He—Some Latin verse of your brother's. I am correcting it.

She(watching him)—It seems fuller of mistakes than usual. (With a burst of irritation) Can't you leave it to-night? I don't suppose you care how miserable I am. I daresay (with a dry sob) you will just go on when I am away as if nothing had happened—only with this difference that you won't be bothered with my mistakes.

He (paling visibly and pushing away his writing)—You are depressed to-night. To-morrow things will look brighter.

She (her eyes full of reproach)—You are very unkind. (Her head goes down on her hands on the table).

He (agitated, rises and paces the room. Stops near and lays his hand on her bowed head, speaks rather unsteadily)—Do you know how hard you make things for me? Do you know I would willingly give this right hand to save you unhappiness

She (looking up with quivering lips)—Is that all you have to say to me?

He (turning his head away)—It is all I dare say. There are things in this world you don't know about that come before incination.

She (desperately)—I don't understand about such things. I don't care about them. I only know that I am miserable.

II.

Billiard room in Continental Hotel, Robert Stuart-Graham, Maxwell Leith, tutor, occupants.

Robert Stuart-Graham (reading the Morning Post)—On my soul, Mab has stolen a march upon us, and no mistake!

Maxwell Leith (testily, chalking a cue with a hand that shakes slightly)—What are you talking about? Pray be more explicit.

Robert Stuart-Graham—Listen to this: (Reads aloud.) "A marriage has been arranged and will take place shortly between Major the Hon. Haig Elmslie, younger, of Mount Elmslie, Royal Scots Fusileers, to Mabel, only daughter of Robert Stuart-Graham, of Ardenvohr, Argyllshire, N.B." Good old Mab! Made all the running in her first season; and it was only yesterday that she had her hair down her back and her frocks up to her knees. (Throws down the newspaper and lights a cigar.) (Wonder what sort of a fellow he is? Hope he has a moor and keeps a yacht. I say, Leith, can you picture Mab in the capacity of lady of the manor?

Maxwell Leith (replaces cue in the stand and makes somewhat abruptly for the door)—The sun's coming out, after all. Much too fine a day to spend cooped up indoors. I believe I shall go for a stroll.

Robert Stuart-Graham (left alone, yawns and throws himself on a seat and picks up the fallen paper)—I don't know what the fellow calls "fine." It's as black as thunder over there. He's as capricious as the weather itself. I wish he had known his mind before Higgins made up his golf foursome for this afternoon without me.

III.

Drawingroom in Mayfair. Maj. Elmslie and Mabel Stuart-Graham occupants.

He (holding her hand and toying with a diamond ring on the third finger of the left hand)—And so you are leaving me to-morrow and you have only this paltry little ring to remind you that you belong to me?

She (blushing and smiling)—I hardly think I shall need a reminder. Ardenvohr is as unexciting as a convent. You speak as if I were going to be swallowed up in a succession of festivities.

He (jealously)—I am suspicious of these quiet retreats. They have a way of producing unattached men, if it be nothing more than a good-looking parson, or even an arbitrary, self-confident country doctor.

She (archly)—You need not agitate yourself. The parson is near-sighted and has only one lung, and the doctor has a wife and six children.

He (relieved)—And you have really been wasting your sweetness on these unappreciative rustics up till now? What a deadly dull time of it you must have had!

She (a shade uneasily by reason of certain unwelcome mental "reminiscences")—Not exactly "deadly dull." At least I did not think it so then: I dare say now I should find things and people that amused me before rather—well—just a trifle wanting in flavor. But—but (shyly) you will come down and relieve the monotony as soon as you can, won't you?

He—Need you ask? The very first moment duty, in the shape of Col. Saunders, makes it possible. Meantime I shall live only for the Pleasures of Hope.—Black and White.
