

News Notes.

The long continued drought in the south-eastern part of New Mexico is causing considerable suffering.

Mr. Woolner, of Peoria, has undertaken to burst the U. S. whiskey trust by erecting a mammoth distillery with the output of which he will fight the product of the combination. There will be a big general hope that he will not succeed.

Mr. Wannamaker, the United States postmaster-general, thinks that with Government control of the telegraph service, ten cent telegrams and three cent telephone messages would be quite within the possibilities. Mr. Wannamaker is an unusually clear-headed business man as well as a politician, and his declaration will make other business men think that government telegraphs in America may not be so far off as the magnitude of the task of taking them over might lead people to believe.
