

Let's Talk It Over

In the flower show held by the I. O. D. of Summerside, that tall, stately, multi-colored flower called the gladiolus, predominated over all the flowers shown, and most people will admit that it is difficult to eclipse gladioli of striking beauty. It is interesting to note that gladiolus, a messenger of beauty, is closely associated with "gladiator", an old warrior who fought with a sword in the days of Ancient Rome. There doesn't seem to be too much affinity between a Roman fighter and this beautiful flower, but somebody thought the spikes of the flower resembled a sword so they were named after the Latin word for "sword" which is "gladius."

We've been looking over the spike of the gladiolus and we've discovered there's been a terrible mistake. The spike doesn't look much like a sword, but it is possibly a little like the sheath, but certainly not like the naked blade. We think it resembles a dainty, scented pocket handkerchief, so now if we can find out the Latin word for "dainty scented pocket handkerchief" we'll be set to apply to the special government agency for getting names changed. (We don't mean the matrimonial bureau.)

We don't know who has the special job of calling flowers names, but some do a very good job, such as the person who hit upon "Dutchman's Pipe", also "paris" which is derived from the French "penser" to think. Those little flowers do have a pensive look about them. Those who gave the names "Baby's Breath" and "Lady's Fingers" were inspired, but the names of Nasturtium, Portulaca, and Geranium must have been given by scholarly persons in dusty rooms surrounded by books in foreign languages. "Geranium", we believe comes from a word meaning "crane's bill" because the seed is shaped like the bill of a crane. Who, in the name of beauty, cares what the seed of a flower look like? (Outside of botanists, that is.)

Farewell Sermon by Mission Teacher

Kensington United Church was filled to capacity at the regular Sunday evening service on August 16. Miss Helen Moore, B.A., delivered the address, an interesting account of her experiences during a separation for a three-year period in the Mission field as a teacher in Shizuoka, Japan. Miss Moore and three other Canadian girls also preparing for service in Japan, took a variety of studies in Scarritt College in Nashville, Tenn. The intensive training included lectures by men, each a specialist in his own field, as in the study of Communist doctrine as a threat to Christianity; the lecturer had been imprisoned for two years in Communist camps. The kindness shown to Canadians by everyone, the interesting studies and the different environment, made every moment of the seven weeks a delight, although much hard work was accomplished.

Miss Moore expressed her gratitude to the Board of the W.M.S., who made it all possible, and to the members of the congregation, "for all you have done and all you have said", inspiring her in her preparation for the work she has chosen. She told of girls who were preparing for missionary service in foreign countries, whose parents opposed the idea and who were receiving no help or encouragement from their own families, and how she and the other Canadians had come to realize and appreciate the support given them by their families and friends.

The girls, she said, were not only chosen for intelligence and ability, but must feel called to the work by love.

An intensive and enlightening experience to the Canadians was attendance at churches of various denominations, the most memorable that of the Seventh Day Adventists where the congregation was entirely Negro. "They were not allowed to attend our church," said Miss Moore, "but we could go to theirs", a fact that impressed her deeply.

In closing, the speaker summed up the seven weeks training period, for which she said she would always be grateful in three words, "It's been real."

Rev. L. M. Murray conducted the service and the scripture lesson from 1st Cor. 13th chap. was read by Miss Moore.

The Junior Girls' Choir assisted with the hymns and sang two selections, accompanied by Mr. Murray: "Abide, O Dearest Jesus" and "We've A Story To Tell To The Nations".

Mr. Murray said interest and effort in the church "is our only hope, not only of salvation but of survival, that the church wake up and go out into the world". He hoped other young people in the church at community would hear the call and answer it.

He called upon Mrs. J. Y. MacFadyen who, on behalf of the W.M.S., presented Helen with a satin in bound wool blanket and a sum of money, suggesting that with it's use, she might always "have a warm spot in her heart" for the donors.

On behalf of the Young Adult Group, Mr. Robert Carruthers presented a Crusaders' Complete Concordance, with the hope that it would help her in her work.

The four Canadian girls will leave on September 4th to sail from Seattle, and look forward to a day in Toronto enroute, where they have been invited to meet the members of the Board of the W.M.S.

"Other men's shoulders", stressing the idea that all we are, we owe to those who have gone before us. The music was under the direction of Mr. Alden Leard, as organist. The choir sang with deep feeling: "By cool Sileam's shady Rill", Mr. J. B. Lewis sang as solo: "The Lord's Prayer." Many baskets of gladioli, sent in memory of loved ones, enhanced the beauty of the church. After the church service white baskets filled with lovely flowers were carried across to the cemetery by a number of young men of the church, and all graves were decorated, while a male quartette sang "The Beautiful Land." The hymn "Abide With Me" was sung and prayer was offered by the pastor closed a most impressive service.—B.Q.

Winnie Likely To Spent Life In Sanctuary

KINGSVILLE, Ont. (CP)—Winnie, the Canada goose which turned out to be a gander, has recovered normal health but is likely to spend the rest of his days at the Miner sanctuary here. Winnie broke into the international news last spring when he couldn't continue the northward flight with the rest of his flock and was grounded on a beach in Connecticut. After some discussion among various governmental agencies, Winnie was flown home to Canada in a big plane and given a home at the famed sanctuary. Winnie is in good enough health to take off and wing his way to James Bay where Canada geese spend their summers. However, a shot has left him with rudder trouble. His tail feathers have grown askew and he can't land properly once he is airborne.
