St. Laurent Speaks At Annual Bar Ass'n Meeting

TORONTO, Sept. 14—(CP)—Prime Minister St. Laurent said last night that the only way to restrain a would-be aggressor—if that aggressor is a world force—is to use force.

He told the Canadian Bar Association at its annual dinner: "Whether or not there is a constitutional veto in the charter of the United Nations, there is, in fact, only one way to restrain a would-be aggressor if that aggressor is a world power. That is by being prepared, if the worst comes to the worst, to use force."

"We can hope that by building up the combined strength of those who genuinely want peace, we will deter any aggressor, but in the final analysis, the deterrent effect of power depends upon its sufficiency and also upon the willingness to use it."

In forming the North Atlantic Alliance, he said, the Western Nations were following a legal process to which the Soviet Union had agreed in the San Francisco charter of the United Nations.

"I do not think there is any question that all of us in the free world would feel much happier, as well as more secure, if we could have confidence that the writ of the United Nations would run everywhere in the world."

Force, even mobilized in support of law, was by itself a very fragile foundation for a genuine rule of law, the Prime Minister continued. Though fragile, it was indispensable. But what was also necessary to the rule of law was a recognition of community within the whole area to which the law applied.

The industrial relations section almost unanimously passed a resolution from Ontario delegates Wednesday commending the work of judges on labor arbitration and conciliation boards and recommending that they continue their labor work.

The resolution must go to the resolutions committee and then to the whole convention before it is approved.

Should it be passed, it would be a contradiction of the association's stand last year and a defeat to delegates from British Columbia.

At the association's Washington meeting last year a resolution asking that judges stop serving in labor disputes was passed.

The B. C. group proposed the same resolution at the present conference.

watchword and only false friends will try to undermine the defense of faith and hope you build yourself.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: I am a girl 16 and like a certain boy. At one time he liked me, but I didn't care for him. Now I know that I do care for him, but he is going with another girl. Should I hint around that I still like him or go with someone else? FRANCES ANSWER: You'll probably feel the same, Frances, about many other boys before you find the one and only. Your affections work on the not uncommon theory of liking what you can't get, and vice versa. If you did get this boy back, you'd probably get tired of him very soon and want someone else. This reaction is nothing to worry about—in fact, at your age it's much better than settling down to going steady with one beau. Go out with other boys, and if your lost love is really meant for you, he'll come back with banners flying.

DEAR MISS DIX: I have been married for six years, and am now 21 years old. I have three lovely children, and we are all very happy. My problem is, I quit school to get married and now would like to resume in the evening the business course I gave up. Can I take up typing at home? M. F. G.

ANSWER: Provided you have a typewriter at home, typing is one of the easiest courses to assume by yourself. Your local book store has, or can get for you, books that give a splendid home course and can be followed easily. Typing is a very useful thing to know, and you are wise to continue it. If you don't own a machine, one can be rented for a small sum. When you are proficient at the work, you can earn enough to buy your own.
