Pouring Theatre Roof Presenting Problems

Referring to the installing of the roof on the theatre section of the Fathers of Confederation Memorial Building, R.M. Rickard, general superintendent of the Pigott Construction Company's Charlottetown project, said "it will be a very serious, touch pour, both structurally and architecturally."

The roof, which will be the only one of its type in the world, will be, as Mr. Rickard put it, "not just a concrete slab." The underside, sandblasted concrete, crossing the island stone, is to be the finished ceiling, incorporating the acoustic system.

The 120 foot long roof will have no visible means of support. "Post tensioning" will be used in its construction, with the support coming from approximately 16 miles of cables running through the 1400 cubic yards of concrete.

ONE POUR

"It would appear that we're going back to a one-pour operation," Mr. Rickard said. (There had been some consideration given to constructing the roof in several pours.)

"We haven't scheduled the actual pour," he said, explaining that this was because it would have to be such a highly-organized operation, and would be affected by many factors.

The pour will take almost three days, and will have to be done steadily. Weather conditions are of vital importance, and the company will have to wait until the long-range forecast is promising.

EMERGENCY

Mr. Rickard said that in a project of this nature, preparation for emergencies must be made. Auxiliary electrical power will have to be on hand in case of city power failure. It is probable that most of the construction equipment on the Island that can be used in an operation of this type will be called into service.

And to ensure that nothing will go wrong, a manual of operations will be put out before the pour, telling each man exactly his job and location, and providing for any emergencies that might arise.

"For instance," said Mr. Rickard, "if a cable breaks, the manual tells who is to fix that cable."

Hardening concrete waits for no man. "If you can't keep pouring, you're in real trouble," the superintendent concluded.

Sangster Making Promotion Trip

He said he will promote Island products in Corner Brook, Nfld., and in areas near Port Cartier and Sept Isles, Que., that are not serviced by highway from Quebec City and Montreal.

Mr. Sangster plans to travel from Corner Brook to the St. Lawrence ports on the MV Sourisie Trader which carries Island produce to the northern markets.

Committee Proposes Bandshell For City

The public relations committee of the Charlottetown City Council has proposed that the City's permanent memorial marking the 1964 centennial of the meeting here leading to Confederation should be the construction of a bandshell at Victoria Park. The announcement was made yesterday by Mayor A. Walthen Gaudet.

The proposal will be submitted to a meeting of the full council and then to the Provincial centennial committee for approval. Communities planning centennial projects of a permanent nature are entitled to a grant amounting to 50 cents per capita.

Mayor Gaudet said since the project was first suggested, he has had strong approval expressed by citizens, especially those who recall the pleasure given in another era, by the band concerts from the old bandstand on the square.

COMPETITION PLANNED

Another suggestion put forth by the public relations committee, in a three-hour meeting dealing with 1964 plans, was that a competition be held among local architects on the design of the new shell, with a suitable award to the winner who would later supervise its construction.

The Mayor said the bandshell —so called because of the curving back and roof to reflect sound to the front,— would be the first in this province, and he expected a great deal of use would be made of it for band concerts, as well as concerts of other types.

It is also believed the Victoria Park site would be ideal for providing entertainment for all the citizens in the summer evenings.

Ch'town Firm Will Display First Dartmouth-Built Volvos

Rix and Acorn an established local firm, today displays the Volvo automobile, the car that is manufactured in Nova Scotia.

The complete line of the company's 1964 models may be inspected at Rix and Acorn's showrooms on Elm Avenue starting today.

Canada's newest automobile plant, now in full production at Dartmouth, represents a triumph of planning and execution for Volvo (Canada) Ltd.

Conceived as recently as January, the announcement that Volvo would be Europe's first auto manufacturer to set up assembly in Canada was made last February. Volvo's president, D. W. Samuel said that Volvo would be the first European manufacturer to build locally, that Volvo would be the first car maker to attempt manufacture in the Maritimes; and predicted that Volvo would be in production by June 15.

On June 11, only three-and-a-half months after the initial announcement and four days ahead of Mr. Samuel's prediction, the first Volvo was driven off the modern Dartmouth assembly line in the presence of Prince Bertil of Sweden and a gathering of federal and provincial dignitaries. The production models from the Dartmouth plant were shown to British Columbians for the first time at the Pacific National Exhibition.

The Volvo plant, located in Dartmouth because of the excellent seaport and rail transportation and a supply of quality conscious production workers is an up to the minute plant with spacious floor areas, wide aisles and a lofty ceiling. The building had existed for many years as a bulk warehouse which has lent itself well to conversion into a modern factory.

The floor area is 50,000 square feet and to this Volvo has added an additional 5,000 square feet for technical office and administration facilities.

The factory has its own 500,-foot wharf which can easily accommodate the ships chartered in the shuttle service carrying components for "Volvo Canadian" automobiles from home plants in Gothenburg, Sweden.

The factory is equipped with the latest in production equipment including a modern paint plant which is used for body touch up and the painting of wheels, front suspension cross members and other sub-assemblies. Under Volvo's manufacturing agreement with the federal government, the body shells are imported fully assembled and painted from Volvo's multi-million dollar factories at Torslanda near Gothenburg. Mr. Samuel has stated that until Volvo (Canada) Ltd., has a painting plant equal to that at Torslanda the company will not jeopardize its reputation for quality by painting locally to lesser standards. The current system of guarantees that Volvo buyers will continue to have cars finished to the standards that have established Volvo's excellent reputation in more than 100 countries.

The factory has two-186 foot assembly lines — the first for trim, sound-deadening processes, paddings and other interior assemblies. The second for mechanical assemblies and final trim.

Sub-assembly areas are located to the sides of the production lines to facilitate movement of heavy components inside the factory. Power tools operating on compressed air are used extensively throughout the assembly process.

The plant has a production capacity of 5,000 cars per year- on a single shift basis.

Coincident with Canadian manufacture has come a heavy demand for Volvo automobiles from the consumer and a spectacular 30 per cent increase in the number of Canadian dealers. Both these factors have already taxed the production capacity of the plant and caused a shortage in most markets.
