Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

Animal wisdom is the right word for Blinky, a raccoon that got its ear caught in a trap. Blinky and the trap arrived at the home of Robert Kising of Longport, Ind., where the raccoon spent the previous summer playing with Kising's two daughters and family dog. The girls turned Blinky loose, but like Mary's little lamb it lingered near and from its recent actions its apt to share its lot with the dog and the little girls.

Steve Brooks, Alberta farmer, got the surprise of his life last February when one of his ewes gave birth to a six-legged lamb. The freak had two extra shoulder blades, giving it four perfectly formed legs.

Compton's mule was not an animal, but a machine for spinning fine yarn. Compton's mule, like the Jenny, was at first worked by hand, but in our day improved models of the mule are run by machinery, some carrying a thousand spindles.

The first steamers to cross the Atlantic were only sailing vessels with engines. Proof of this may be gleaned from the following official record. "The Savannah left America on the 22nd of May, 1819, and arrived in Liverpool 26 days later. Through most of the trip, sails were used; only now and then were the clumsy paddle wheels set in motion. The first vessel to cross the Atlantic entirely under steam were the English steamships Sirius in 1836, and the Great Western in 1838. The Sirius made the eventful voyage in 18 days; and the latter, which was the larger of the two boats, arrived after 15 days with 90 passengers.

The chart used by Columbus on his first voyage to the New World had India and Japan placed on the Atlantic Ocean opposite Spain. A map made by Leonardo da Vinci in 1515 shows Florida and America as islands off the coast of Cathay (China). And a map from the "Geographia Universalis" of 1540 has North and South America appear as separate continents, but North America extends only to the Mississippi River, and India and China are still near.

The Atlantic Ocean used to be called the "Sea of Darkness," except for the wild Vikings, whose dragon-boats roamed far over the waters of the North Atlantic, the crew of Europe and especially sailors, were terrified of the thought of sailing too far from their home port because of the tall stories then in circulation.

The "Sea of Darkness" was said to be the haunts of horrible monsters that dragged ships to Davy Jones' locker and robbed up their human freight with great relish. It was believed, too, that in the middle of this mysterious ocean lay a magnetic mountain that actually pulled out the iron parts that held a vessel together. But the most amusing of these ancient beliefs was that whales 500 or 600 feet long, would lie on the surface of the water for such long periods that sand gathered on their backs. Sailors, thinking these were islands, would land and light fires to prepare their meals. Then the whales, tortured by the heat, would promptly nose dive, carrying the sailors to a watery grave.

Map makers of the time were not lacking in imagination either and some of these early maps show whirlpools, serpent-rocks, demons, mermaids, and what have you. No wonder then, that sailors would rather face the devil than venture out on such strange waters. It is small wonder, also, that as many strange and startling sea sagas have been handed down to us.

The first playing cards were made and colored by hand. Then it was found that they could be made faster by stenciling and later still the figures were cut out of blocks of wood and printed on the cards.

Among the strange beliefs which once existed about the world none was more curious than the belief that if anyone sailed beyond the Cape of Good Hope they would encounter burning winds and boiling water, and that anyone who traveled beyond this point would be changed from white to black. This belief was based on the fact that as they journeyed toward the equator the air actually "got hot, and all the people they saw were dark-skinned or black."

Card Of Thanks

The family of the late Mrs. Weston Francis wish to express sincere thanks to all those friends and neighbours for their cards of sympathy or in any way helped in their recent sad bereavement.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear Father and Brother, who passed away, Alexander Logan, September 6th, 1938; Kenneth Logan, December 24th, 1931.

O happy hours we once enjoyed, How sweet their memory still, But death has left a loneliness, The world can never fill.

Please God, forgive one silent tear, The constant wish that they were here, Dearest to us, than words can tell, Is the dear Father, Brother and Sister, We have loved so well.

Away in God's beautiful garden, Sheltered from sorrow and pain, Some day when life's journey is ended, We shall meet our loved ones again.

Lovingly Remembered by Charlie and Garnet.

Religion and Life

By Very Rev. George C. Pidgeon, D.D., LL.D. First Moderator of the United Church of Canada (Copyright)

LIGHTS OF THE WORLD "What you are speaks so loudly that I can't hear what you say." So said one man to another who was trying to help him through his moral failures and intellectual difficulties.

About the same time some students were criticizing the leaders of a certain religious organization, and added, "But there is John. You cannot meet him without feeling that he has something that we lack." We happen to know the man about whom they were speaking. He was quiet, reserved, and never talked about himself.

But when he did speak on any matter before us, one felt a weight in his judgment that suggested hidden resources on which he was drawing continually. This is what Jesus was referring to when He said to men who were following Him and learning from Him: "You are the light of the world." (Matthew 5:14-16).

But we cannot understand that saying without going behind it to another: "I am the light of the world; he who follows me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." (John 8:12).

It was not only what Jesus taught, but what Jesus was in Himself that made Him the Light of the world about God and man and destiny. About God He said: "He who has seen me has seen the Father."

No one knew the defects of men better than Jesus did, and no one ever suffered from human wickedness as He did. But He found in every man a capacity for God, and He treated the worst of men as infinitely precious to God. He threw light on the destiny of men—it is a life in union with God, a life in God equipped for His service here and hereafter.

Now He taught that those who followed Him walked in the light, and also became lights in themselves. St. Paul the greatest interpreter of Jesus, explains Jesus' saying in this way: "We all with face unveiled, reflecting as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the Lord the Spirit." Referring to the pagan environment in which his beloved converts in Philippi had to live, he said: "Among whom ye shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life."

Which is to say that their Christian experience shone through their every day living, and also that they taught the truth of Christ to all who would listen.

Does this happen today? In answer take one example out of a multitude. In our early student days, the name of Murdoch MacKenzie was one to conjure with among students. He was utterly committed to world evangelization. One Christmas holiday he came down to Quebec and preached in the Presbyterian churches there. We did not hear him, but when we returned to the little college in which we were studying we found the spirit of the students transformed. There were just a few of us, but immediately a missionary society was formed, and we began work in our own distribut. There are churches there now that those students started. That one student's passion for Christ and His cause changed our outlook and sent us out with a mission.

Student judgments of men and morals are based on keen insight into character and are generally borne out by the later career of the man. His fellow-student in Montreal revered MacKenzie and followed his lead. When he went out to China as a missionary he and his comrades were first regarded as "Foreign Devils," but by life and word they brought Christ's saving power to the lowest in that land, and frequent changes of the worst into the best broke down suspicion and commanded respect of high and low alike.

Through all the tempest and turmoil of the founding of a Christian Church in a foreign land, MacKenzie kept in touch with the thought of the Christian world. He read incessantly. Two of his friends called on him one evening after he had suffered a sore bereavement, and in the warmth of their sympathy, he began to talk about the results of his reading. With a clearness that reviewed the course of thought from the 1870s onward, explaining what each thinker added to the great discussion that followed Darwin and his followers, right up to our time. That marvellous Christian character, with the man's vast knowledge and profound thought, was back of his presentation of the Gospel in its simplicity and saving power to a people who had never before heard of Christ and His love. A strong, Christian Church was the result of what he and his companions were and did.

Oh! One cannot believe that the black darkness of Communism quenched a light like that which they kindled. Our prayer is unceasing for the emancipation of our own spiritual children in that land. Our thought of what they are and are doing is expressed in St. John's words: "The light shines in the darkness and the darkness overcomes it not."

VERENIGING, South Africa—(CP)—A 17-year-old African who stabbed his friend said mournfully "I should get a whipping." The magistrate, who agreed, asked how many strokes. "Four," said the African. "Four it will be," said the magistrate.

Stresses Need Of Religious Zeal

LONDON, Ont., Sept. 5—(CP)—Renowned religious zeal is needed in these times when "all the conflicts of the 19th century seem to be moving rapidly towards a climax," the Primate of the Church of England in Canada said Thursday.

Most Rev. Walter Barfoot, Archbishop of Edmonton, told the first session of the 18th general synod here "the church has as an essential part of its gospel the creation of the kind of society in which man can live in freedom. This issue will probably be lost or won in this century."

"Whether we are more or less guilty in this matter than other communions I cannot say, but the fact is clear that in vast areas of this country there is no adequate ministry to the unchurched multitude."

The Primate spoke at the synod's first joint session after Very Rev. W. R. Matthews, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, England, told 300 delegates at an opening devotional service that the future of Christianity depends on the unity of all churches.
