INVENTION NOVELTIES.

A BICYCLE THAT IS EITHER A SINGLE OR TANDEM.

A Machine That Can Add—New Electric Letters for Advertising Purposes—Other Scientific News.

The accompanying cut shows an English make of interchangeable tandem bicycle recently patented. It is applicable to any rear-driving safety, and can be changed from a single to a double mount in 15 minutes.

To fit it, take the back wheel out of safety. Then connect our attachment to safety by fixing B into the fork ends of safety. B is a bridge with a nut, each end of which carries the second crank bracket. Then fix C, which is a clamp, on to the seat lug. D is an adjustable stay, with a right and left-handed thread, which forms chain adjustment for front chain, and strengthens front machine by fixing F to down tube; then put wheel into A.

A NEW CHAINLESS SAFETY.

In the bicycle shown in the following cut, instead of the usual chain and sprocket, two bevel gears, adjusted on ball bearings, whose teeth are accurately cut by a special process, are incased in neat dust-proof aluminium boxes in the center of the crank shaft bracket. To one of the gears is attached a shaft that passes through the rear fork of the frame to the rear wheel, where it engages the teeth of two more gears, also incased in dust-proof boxes. It is remarked that the gears are accurately adjusted, run in oil, and are entirely concealed from view. The manufacturers claim for the wearing qualities of the gears that they will not break and that they will outwear the rest of the machine; also that there is no possibility of their getting out of alignment under the same proper usage as the ordinary chain and sprocket wheel receives. It is said the wheel runs as easily as any in the market, climbs hills with one-third less labor and saves the rider the trouble and expense incident to loose and gritty chains.

CHAINLESS SAFETY.

IT BEATS THE BOOKKEEPER.

A Little Machine That Does His Work in Half the Time.

The accompanying picture shows the appliance, which will add up mechanically a column of figures in something between a half and a quarter of the time occupied by an expert bookkeeper. As shown by illustration, the centigraph has five keys, something like those of a typewriter, and numbered one to five. The other numerals are obtained by simultaneous pressures of No. 5 with keys 1, 2, 3 and 4, and all that the operator has to do to add up a lengthy column of figures is to read off the units one by one from the column and press down the corresponding key or combination of keys. At the conclusion the sum of these various units will be indicated, the hundreds by the pointed arrow, and the tens and units in the slot on the circular plate. For instance, the sum shown in the drawing is three on the hundred pointer, and 32 in the slot, i. e., 332. The capacity of the indicator is 500, a sum quite sufficient to express the addition of units in the longest column ever made in a business ledger. Having recorded the unit—in the case shown, 2—the machine is turned backwards to zero, and then used to carry forward 33 to the next column—the tens—which may be added up in precisely the same way. The mechanism is sufficiently explained by the illustration, and is, comparatively speaking, quite simple.

THE MACHINE ADDER.

GOOD ROADS.

They Are the Great Highway for the Advancement of Social Life.

At the Good Roads Convention held in connection with the World's Fair at Chicago, "The Importance of Good Roads" was discussed. The next paper on the programme was by Mr. Albert A. Pope, of Boston, who said: "Aside from questions of material gain, which is perhaps the lowest standpoint to consider the good that comes from easy means of communication, there is to be borne in mind that good roads are the great highways for the advancement of social life, education and Christianity. The visit of friends, the attendance of children at school and the gathering together at church are all governed, to a great or less extent by the condition of the roads; and the abandonment of farms and the crowding together of people in cities is due largely to the isolation caused by bad means of communication to and from the farm. But the problem to be solved is to provide money to build good roads. Many farmers are opposed to the good road movement because they believe it means to them increased taxation, and in some sections of the country agricultural interests are so depressed that they do not feel able to bear greater financial burdens. It has been estimated that the state of Illinois loses every year $100,000,000 because of bad roads. Now I am going to urge a plan which I believe to be the most burdensome and the most effectual and equitable for providing good roads. Let each state establish a graduated succession tax, that is, a tax on property passing by succession or by inheritance or by legacy. Such a tax might be arranged as follows: On estates valued at $10,000 up to $100,000, 1 per cent. On estates of over $100,000 and up to $500,000, 1 per cent on the first $100,000 and 2 per cent. on the remainder, and so on, gradually increasing the amount as the inheritance increases. The succession tax will not fall on the poor. Those whose estates amount to $10,000 can well afford to give $100 to the state in return for all the protection of its laws, which has enabled wealth to be accumulated and enjoyed. Good roads when rightly constructed can be maintained at comparatively small cost, and as the wealth of the states increases the succession tax would furnish sufficient revenue to meet all expenses of the state after paying for the maintenance of the roads."

A Church Hour Glass.

That short sermons were in favor with our forefathers is abundantly shown by by the fact that the large hour glasses which formerly constituted an indispensable feature of the furnishings of every pulpit marked not half hours, nor yet whole ones, but merely quarters. Perhaps the handsomest of these old glasses is the one preserved in the Church of St. Albans, in London. Its size and its beautiful brass framework make it an ornament to the edifice. I am sorry to say that some preachers seem to have used these hour glasses, not for the purpose of calculating the length of their sermons, but of the different portions thereof, and would inaugurate a new argument every time that the sand had run out, prefacing their remark with the words, "Brethern, another glass." Indeed, that eminent divine, Dr. Isaac Barrow, is on record as having preached a sermon of such length before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen in St. Paul's Cathedral that during its delivery he had time to turn his hour glass upside down no less than twelve times.—N.Y. Tribune.

To Take Down a Wire Fence.

I find the following plan a simple and easy one. Take a common wire spool and tie to the hind hub of a low truck wagon. Tie the four ends to as many spokes. When the tops are well tightened, pour on water to shrink them on tighter. I stretched my wire in a straight line and passed the end over the top of the spool, started my team and had the wire and the spool in one hour.

Japanese Waltzing Mices.

Lately the employes at the Philadelphia zoological garden have been amused by the antics of some queer little animals which are not on public exhibition. The newcomers are white and black Japanese waltzing mice, seven in number. When let out of their cages they wink at each other and step gracefully forward with a movement which some of the beholders declare is a bow. Head Keeper Manley whistles "Annie Rooney," and the mice skip away in pairs with a queer whirling motion. When he strikes up "The Bowery" they revolve so fast that nothing can be seen but little gray balls. "Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-aye" causes them to "swing corners" and "dance all hands around." Once the owner ventured to play the "Dead March" while they were dancing. With a whisk of their tails the little rodents fled to their cages like a man pursued by a nightmare.
