

Emerson.

The charm of Emerson is due in the first instance to his peculiar and original style. His phrases are oddly disconnected, they embody a series of detached thoughts which sometimes elude one's grasp or are even interpretable as flat commonplace.

The London correspondent of the Boston Herald gives an amusing incident of "opening day," in which the New Brunswick chieftain, "Gabe," played an important part.

One of these had been placed near the display of whaling implements, and another close by the main entrance to our section, facing the broad aisle between the United States and Canada.

Standing as erect and immovable as a royal horse guard on duty, and scarcely distinguishable from the cast of a negro near by, he became, as soon as the opening ceremonies were over, the centre of attraction for a large crowd.

Some of the people were deceived into the belief that he was a cast. One lady exclaimed: "Well! I do declare, these Yankees are very clever people; they are sure to get ahead of all the rest of the world. No one could tell but what that colored man was live."
