Punishing Children.

A mother who uses the rod writes to the Toronto Mail:—"Will you allow me to say a word on behalf of the much-abused rod? I think all will admit with me that punishment is nature's method of enforcing obedience to her laws, punishment that sometimes is terribly severe. Take an instance. I forbid my child to play with lighted papers, and for disobeying me I punish that child and prevent the dangerous amusement in future. My neighbor's child also plays with lighted papers, but its mother is "soft-hearted," refuses to punish her child, who continues the forbidden sport, and as a result is burned severely, perhaps fatally. Now, the punishment I inflicted, sufficiently severe to enforce obedience, was greater kindness to the child than the laxity of my neighbor. Satisfied that punishment is necessary, let me say a word as to the different methods of punishment. Different opinions may prevail on this question, but for my own part, after much thought and experience in rearing a large family, I prefer the rod, and for the following reasons: (1.) The pain is physical and is more deterrent than moral punishments, depending for their efficacy upon the disgrace involved. (2.) There are no dangerous after consequences, as may be the case in confinement, deprivation of food, locking up in the dark, &c., resorted to by some parents. (3.) The punishment can be better graded to the offence, and made light or severe as circumstances demand."

Went Down With The Ship.

Captain Todd, of the British steamship Sarah Ann, which sailed from Baltimore in February, and reached Galway, Ireland, in the latter part of March, reports that crossing the ocean, and while in lat. 38 north and lon. 65.30, he fell in with a lot of wreckage. Capt. Todd scanned the horizon with his glass, and two or three miles south he sighted a brigantine tossed about by the mountainous seas. The national colors of France and a flag of distress were found flying from her masthead. Capt. Todd steamed to windward of the distressed vessel and attempted to rescue the sailors, but a small boat would not live in such a sea. By sprinkling oil on the sea, he was enabled to secure comparatively smooth water, and a lifeboat from the steamship rescued four of the sailors. The Captain, the mate, and cabin boy of the ship were deaf to the entreaties to abandon her, and they bade a last farewell to their comrades as they sailed away. As soon as they saw the rescued sailors were safe on board the steamship, they hauled down the signals of distress, went below and an hour later the vessel sunk with all on board. Her name was the Dix Freres, and she was bound from Martinique to Boston, Mass.

It Didn't Work.

A young man from St. Louis read in the papers that there was an infallible way to get ahead of the mortgage fiend. "When," said the journal he consulted, "the gambler lays down the three cards and offers to wager that you cannot take up a designated card, pick up all three at one sweep and you have him sure." Impressed with the infallibility of this rule, the young man from St. Louis lay around till he found a Chicago gambler who was inviting any adventurous soul who would bet $5 to pick the jack out of the three cards that formed his working capital. The young man said he didn't bet on $5, but if the gambler had any money he had a $50 bill that would talk. The bet was made and the gambler threw the cards. "Now you bet $50 that I can't pick up the jack," said the St. Louisian, with a smile of confidence. "That's me," laconically replied the gambler. "Then here she goes," replied the St. Louisian, as he took up all three cards at once. "I guess that's my money," said the gambler impassively; "there's no jack at all there!" There wasn't either, and he took the money. "You see, sonny," he added, "there's a big percentage in favor of the dealer in this here sinful game." —Texas Siftings.

His Affectionate Mamma's Desire.

(From the School Journal.)

A lad in school was found guilty of a serious infraction of discipline and was directed by his teacher to tell his mother what misdemeanor he had committed. The next morning the schoolmarm called Johnny to her desk, when the following dialogue ensued: "Well, Master Johnny, did you tell your mother what infraction of discipline you were guilty of yesterday, and the reprimand and punishment you received?" "Yes'm," was the sententious reply. "Well, and what did your mother say?" "She said she'd like to wring your neck for you." No more discipline reports were sent home to that mother.

Threatening Circulars.

A despatch from Lawrence, Ky., of the 7th says that in "Ottawa and this city circulars were yesterday distributed on the streets. They were printed in red with a wide red border, and were headed 'A mere question of blood.' They were addressed to parents, guardians and teachers. They begin by saying: 'You have sent your sons, wards and pupils equipped with implements of mutilation and murder to coerce, drive, mangle and kill a body of workers who are struggling with a giant foe against monster oppression, and closed with the following threatening language: 'Wherefore understand this illstarred fact that while this is a free country it is a free country for all, and just so surely as you send your boys to slaughter the strikers, just so surely will the strikers slaughter your boys. Have not your blinded guides apprised you of this fact? We presume not; they have been so busily scheming to keep you asleep.'

In Tom Hood's veracious ballad of "Miss Kilmansegg and her Golden Leg," the heroine is a young lady, who having had the misfortune to lose her natural flesh and bone supporter, is presented by her father, a wealthy capitalist, with a golden substitute—cork or wood being deemed by him too utterly plebeian to bear the weight of his heiress. Tempted by the fame of her golden leg and other solid charms, a suitor at length appears, and is favorably received. He marries the lady, and for a brief period everyone is happy. But happiness among mortals is but a fleeting shade, and when at last the husband demands possession of the precious limb for which he had sold his bachelor independence, the lady indignantly refuses to part with it. A struggle ensues in which the wife is killed by a blow on the head with the golden leg. The leg that had been the emblem of her wealth, the cause of her fame, and the attraction to her suitors, thus became the instrument of her destruction. Then, according to the ballad, an inquest was held, of which the verdict was "felo de se because her own leg had killed her."

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little abraded awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. [Feb 4 eod wky]

The report of the Registrar-General for Ireland, for the year 1885, shows that the number of natives of that country who emigrated during the year was 62,034, a smaller number than in any year since 1879. The total number of emigrants from 1851 to 1885 inclusive was 3,051,361, an average of 87,181 for each year. The annual average in the years from 1852 to 1855 was 148,985; in 1856-1865, 88,272; in the next ten years it decreased to 74,667, and in the last ten years it decreased again to 67,357. Of last year's emigration 80.1 per cent. came to Canada.

Horace Dodd, of Millview, Va., killed a six-foot moccasin snake last week that had a wire collar around its neck, to which was attached a button with these words: "Don't tread on me!" As this was the motto of the famous Revolutionary "Culpeper Minute men," and as the button was probably from one of their uniforms, the question arises as to the probable age of this particular serpent.

"Why are we like angel's visits?" said a pretty girl on a sofa to her bashful lover, who was sitting lonesomely on a chair at the other end of the room. "Really," he stammered and blushed, "I must give it up. Why are we?" "Because," she replied, significantly, "we are few and far between. He destroyed the similarity almost instantly.

High society circles in England are flustered over the fact that the wife of the disgraced and imprisoned Viscount Hinton has been forced to return to the stage, her original mode of life, in order to support herself and her children. She obtained an engagement at the Sadler's Wells music hall, where she made her first appearance on Saturday night.

While a country parson was preaching, the chief of his parishioners, sitting near the pulpit, fell fast asleep; whereupon he said: "Now, beloved friends, I am in a great strait, for if I speak too softly those at the further end of the church cannot hear me, and if I talk too loud I shall wake the chief man in the parish."

Dr. Luther C. Rose, of Palmyra, Ohio, claims to have invented after three years' work a most excellent telephone transmitter. In a test made on Monday over 875 miles of a wire a whisper was heard distinctly, and also the ticking of a watch held ten feet from the transmitter.

Judge Lucas, of McCook, Neb., went to the public bath house the other day, and was just in the enjoyment of a hot water bath when there was an explosion. One end of the bath house went flying into the street, and the judge followed, landing in a big snow drift. The boiler in the basement had burst.
