general input into the executive and SU Council.

She sees a need to bring the issues to students more, and doesn't think executives should hide down in the Barn, where students don't see them very much.

Heather thinks the campus is now divided on the basis of faculties and classes, and sees a need to unite all these groups, and hopefully have them all supporting SU activities, including the Panther Lounge and Barn events.

Linda Peterson

Treasurer candidate Linda Peterson urges students to "reward the Student Union with good management" and says she's willing to take on the responsibility.

Having worked in her high school's business office, Linda has experience with book-keeping and says she's anxious to get involved in student activities.

She believes the Treasurer should be able to make up budgets and stick to them, balance the books, and have no difficulty handling cash.

But she thinks an ability to work with others in organizing student activities and making people familiar with what's going on around UPEI is just as important.

She'd like to see more publicity for university activities, and hopes to increase the bond between faculty members and students by getting more profs involved in Student Union activities.

Ken Mutter

Ken Mutter is running for Treasurer, and thinks you should vote for him "for new ideas as well as careful money management."

As this year's president of the UPEI Business Society, Ken has a background in working with students.

He says the Treasurer must do the books for the SU, sit on the Board of Governors, coordinate payments and payrolls, sit on committees, and act as a signing authority for checks.

As well, he feels that the Treasurer has more free time than the other executives to make himself available to students and listen to their ideas and problems.

Ken believes the SU includes social activities plus a whole lot more, and that it can only be as good as the students involved.

He wants to promote involvement by keeping students more informed about activities, and thinks it unfortunate that most students won't become active unless there's an emergency such as last year's proposed academic changes. He'd also like to promote SU interaction with the different faculties.

Ken encourages all students to take an active role in UPEI, and to start by getting out and voting in this election.

University sports to run on pay TV

OTTAWA (CUP) — Canadian university sports can be on pay television by September.

The Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union has an informal agreement which gives the Action Canada Sports Network the right to broadcast university sports events that are not already under contract to other companies.

The proposal is valid only if the network receives approval to operate from the Canadian Radio, Television and Telecommunications Commission.

"If that happens, then we will start negotiating a contract. But we have sent them a letter agreeing in principal to the idea," said CIAU vice president John McConachie.

The network is expected to spend an unnamed but large amount of its five year, $65 million budget on the broadcast of amateur sports.

"Our first-year programming plans concentrate on CIAU events including Canadian college football, basketball, and hockey," said network president Gordon Craig in his written application to the CRTC.

"As our service matures, Canadian amateur sports exposure will increase through coverage of sports like volleyball, track and field, swimming, diving, and lacrosse," he continued.

The two advantages to the proposal are the greater exposure and financial input university athletics would receive.

"We've felt for a long time that we have a quality product and that it has just been a matter of getting it to the public," said McConachie.

The scheduling proposed for the broadcasts would be game-of-the-week format, with games expected to be the most competitive or important getting aired.

Like all the candidates for treasurer of the Student Union this year, Brenda Beairsto is a third year accounting major.

And she promises, "I'm not going to steal your money."

Brenda sees the main duties of the Treasurer as making the budget for the year and keeping an eye on the money to see that it's wisely spent.

She thinks the executive could do more to promote involvement, saying, "those who are underage don't get to use the Barn a lot."

As a member of the executive, Brenda hopes to change that.

If she's elected, Brenda wants people to think they can come and talk to her for any reason.

She's straightforward about "What I'd really like to see is an approachable council at UPEI."

"Money makes the world go 'round. Make it go in your direction ..." That's one of Heather MacNevin's slogans, in her campaign to be elected as Student Union Treasurer.

She says students are unaware of what's going on in the Student Union, and that they need more input through general meetings and from the sub-organization level.

Heather too is an Accounting major. She's worked for two years at the Royal Bank and was on her high school student council.

In her view, the Treasurer's duties include planning a budget, keeping journal entries for cash accounts, acting as a co-signer of checks, preparing statements for Council, and giving
