Opposed To Purge Of Reds And Fascists

LONDON, April 17 — (Reuters) — A purge of Communists and Fascists from British universities and industry would be likely to produce "a rapid and progressive decay in professional standards," the British Atomic Scientists Association said today.

It added that "it is questionable whether any security measures based on political association would give any protection from further cases" like that of Dr. Klaus Fuchs.

The German-born scientist's conviction last month for betraying atom secrets to Russia has intensified demands for increased security measures.

The atom scientists said that to penalize people on political grounds would tend towards "a poisoning of the relationships between colleagues in the same institutions, and a serious change for the worse in the intellectual atmosphere of our schools and universities to the great detriment of coming generations."

The Association announced in a statement that it would view "with grave concern" any extension to other institutions of the Government's purge of Communists and Fascists in the Civil Service.

The statement said the Association is divided in its views on the necessity for the purge of the Civil Service, announced in the House of Commons by Prime Minister Attlee in May, 1948. But the Association was generally agreed that the purge should not be allowed to spread.

In other countries where individuals employed in universities and industry had been penalized on political grounds, the effect on the development of science and the advancement of knowledge had been "disastrous" in the long run the Association said.

"Men of proved ability and distinction are replaced by others of lesser attainments who have the recommendation of political conformity."

Similar measures should not be taken in Britain at a time when the need for scientists was so great "and the supply of competent men so inadequate."

Douglas Jay, financial secretary to the Treasury, told the House of Commons last month that 47 Communists and near-Communists and one Fascist had been removed from posts in the Civil Service since March, 1948.
