THE POET BURNS. — On Friday next the 24th inst., at the Opera House in this city will be celebrated the anniversary of Burns' Birthday. The grand concert, under the auspices of the Caledonian Club of P. E. Island, we have no doubt, will be a great success. The programme, for which sets forth an array of musical talent of no mean order, and we are glad to know that all over Canada, from the Pacific to the Atlantic, and nearly all the cities in the Great Republic, will also duly celebrate the event. It is not necessary to explain the reason of this. The works of Burns are true to nature. They awaken a responsive chord in every human breast. With all our boasted thoughts and feelings of equality, freedom and independence, we have not yet attained to that type of noble manhood which is represented in the productions of Robert Burns. And how much easier it is in our day than it was in his to be true to ourselves and have the boldness to say what we really think and feel! The writings of Burns exposed cant and hypocrisy, but those sins still prevail, though in a milder and more fashionable form. As time rolls on, the more do we find the works of Burns appreciated and his memory revered. In celebrating the anniversary of his birth we perpetuate his memory and show the deep debt of gratitude the world owes to Robert Burns, Scotland's poet.

TEMPERANCE AND CIVIC REFORM—THE CITIZENS' DUTY.

The Rev. W. J. Kirby preached in the Upper Methodist Church last night by request of the Citizens' League, taking for his text Acts xxii-20, "And when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him."

And, said the rev. gentleman, that seems to be all Paul did. He merely stood by and consented. He did not cast a stone, nor a ballot, as far as we know, against him. His voice was not heard in the rabble, and yet when he tells his experience this blot and stain on his conscience has to be referred to.

We meet this principle of the text in all reforms. There are always indifferent lookers-on, who try and secure themselves from guilt by saying they did not do anything wrong themselves. The Bible teaches us that we are just as responsible for the good we ought to do, as for the sin committed.

We maintain that the receiver is as guilty as the thief—that we are as guilty for the crime we might avert as the wrong we do. "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not to him it is sin."

We all admit (1) that we are responsible for our direct acts. We would not for a moment excuse those from murder who cast the stones at the sainted Stephen. We are guilty if we use the weapon which brings about the crime.

(2) We admit further that we are guilty if we employ another to commit murder. If Saul of Tarsus employed any of these young men to stone Stephen he is guilty with them.

(3). We admit further, perhaps, that we are responsible for what we empower another to do. A certain society has for its motto: That each man is individually responsible for so much evil as he has power of preventing. If Paul could have prevented the death of Stephen he was guilty for not making the attempt.

It is very strange to some of us that men who would scorn the thought of consenting to the violation of any other law on the statute book of our land, do not show the slightest feeling of shame in the violation of the Scott Act, nor make the smallest effort to prevent the violation of this law. It seems to be a known fact that there are at least sixty violators of the law in this city, and yet, with the exception of a few temperance citizens, nobody regards the fact for a moment. If there were sixty violators of any other law, how long would it take to seek them out and punish them for their lawlessness?

Except under certain strict conditions, nobody can sell or buy liquor in this city without violating law, hence whoever does either sell or buy must be classed by his own act with the lawless of the land.

But the question we ask ourselves is, who is responsible? Here is open violation of law in our midst. Somebody must be to blame to allow it. It is easy enough to blame those who govern us. But who are they? Why, men whom you have placed over yourselves by votes, and thus the responsibility resolves itself upon the electorate.

Am I then doing my duty as a citizen? What is duty? Some writer said that in many cases it is "simply selfishness written large." The officers of states and corporations, the policeman, the switchman, the sentinel, are all on duty "perhaps, but it may mean only because they are paid to do what they do. The Indian soldier, Henry Lawrence, wished for his epitaph, the words: Here lies Henry Lawrence who tried to do his duty."

Some appropriate illustrations were given here. The Celt is said to be usually stirred up by the word "glory," and the Teuton by the word "duty." Professor Tyndall in 1871 met two Prussian officers and, speaking to them about the late war, he asked how the soldiers behaved. The officers said they never heard the cry "We must conquer" from German soldiers, but in hundreds of cases "We must do our duty" was heard. If such a feeling of duty, regardless of anything but the fact that it was right, would lay hold of us, how soon our city would be cleaned out of all which is corrupt and lawless in all the departments of life.

We must decide whether we are doing our duty as regards our influence. There are two sets of influences: Conscious influence, which is the voluntary influence of what we consciously say and do—what we say and do with a special aim and purpose. We may say too much, and do too little—yet talk along proper lines may do much good for temperance. Perhaps if each clergyman of the city would undertake to reason with and enlighten those claiming to have a preference to his church, on this subject, by personal contact, there might be some seller who would decide to give up the sinful business, and some drinker who would become a sober citizen. Then there is our unconscious influence, more potent than the other, even as the silent forces of nature are more potent than the other. The silent law of gravitation which holds the universe in place and harmony is far more potent than the destructive lightning, or the noisy electric storm. The silent power of spring is greater than the destructive power of the volano; the influence of a consistent life and daily work. A man who votes and acts as he prays and talks is a far greater power than the boisterous talker in the temperance society.

But this line of thought, affecting duty and influence, belongs to no one class but all men, the high or low, rich or poor; and it may be we have overlooked the power of the common people. How easily they could change the state of affairs in this city. A person said to us a few days ago they could vote only as their employer allowed. But surely such a shameful thing cannot exist in this age of freedom. Let the working classes take a manly stand and demand the right to vote as they please, and the employers would be compelled to give them the liberty of conscience and vote. Thank God that amongst this class are found men true to their God and their duty; men humble in life, but manly men, "sun-crowned men," who would not be guilty of the wrong committed by men in the higher walks of life.

Men in the humbler walks of life are exemplifying true courage and devotion to right and truth. But what can we say of those who know better, who know their indulgence in intoxicants is contrary to the law of the city. Men who are not like some poor drunkard who craves a drink to satisfy a depraved habit, and who cannot get free while the curse is allowed, but men who, with eyes open and the curse before them, knowing its blighting, destroying, damning effects on their fellow men—what shall we say of such who stand by and look on without lifting a voice or hand to save from the destroying influence these poor unfortunates? We hide our faces for very shame to think that such men will not deny themselves this paltry indulgence, and for the sake of God and home and native land strike a blow at this traffic which shall shatter it forever. Watch your influence and let it ever be on the side of right, and listen to the voice which speaks to us to-night, saying: "God expects that at this important juncture in our history as a city, that every man will do his duty."

HILARY TERM—SUPREME COURT.

MONDAY, Jan. 20.

Before Mr. Justice Hodgson and a jury. —McInnis and wife vs. the City of Charlottetown. The plaintiff's evidence in this case was all in this morning and Mr. Haszard, Q. C., moved for a non-suit on the ground that the city was not liable for damages upon the facts proved. Mr. McLean, Q. C., for the plaintiffs argued contra. His Lordship refused to non-suit, but reserving leave to move again, and directed the case to go to the jury. The counsel then addressed the jury on the question of damages. A verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for $200 was returned.

THE COMING RACES. — Entries for the skating races at the Rink on Wednesday evening are coming in thick and fast. They will close to-night, and the list, which will comprise flyers from all parts of the Province, will be published to-morrow. Up to date there are six entries in the one-mile amateur; three in the one-mile open; four in three mile open; six in 16-year-old, and from eight to ten in the smaller races. An 11-year-old race has been substituted for the 10-year-old. There is no doubt that these races will be the best ever seen on P. E. Island.
