Hanging Vine

A novelty hanging vine may be grown from a sweet potato by putting it into a hanging basket of pure sand, or sand loam, and watering occasionally. The dark green leaves resemble a variety of ivy.

Greasy Pans

If the pan to be washed is very greasy, heat it slightly before putting it into the dishpan. It will loosen the grease and cause it to wash more readily.

Soap Jelly

A soap jelly suitable for laundering clothes can be made by putting left-over pieces of soap into a jar and covering them with boiling water.

About four years ago General Eisenhower spent a week at his flat in the Castle shortly after it was presented to him. It is always kept in readiness. Beds are aired and furniture dusted regularly and should he decide to visit the Castle the flat could be ready for occupation within a few hours.

"Like" home on the top story is reached by an electric lift, and fitted carpets and electric radiators make the rooms warm and comfortable. Show piece is the round drawing-room with windows looking out over Culzean Bay. West wing of the old Castle—the ancient home of the Kennedys—is still used as a residence by the Marquess of Ailesford.

The rest of the building—except for General Eisenhower's flat—is open to visitors and about 40,000 people visited the Castle in 1950. The gardens of Culzean Castle are among the finest in Scotland and they will be put in especially good order for this year's Festival of Britain celebrations.

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Husband's Job Most Men Shirk Responsibility For Making Marriage A Success

Making marriage a success is a job that the average husband wishes off on his wife. That is why so many marriages go bloey, because it is a contract too big for any woman to handle without help. It takes teamwork to do it. No woman alone and unaided can pull off the stunt of a happy marriage. She has to have a husband to help her.

Yet it is the custom of husbands to duck all responsibility for the outcome of their marriages beyond supporting them. After a man has paid the bills he feels that he has done his duty and he passes the buck to his wife. He washes his hands of the whole matrimonial business, sits back and expects her to make a blooming success of it.

If she doesn't, he lays the whole blame on her. If they don't prosper, it is the wife's fault. If they don't get along together, she is the trouble-maker. If marriage doesn't come up to his expectation and he regrets his bargain, she was the one who lured him into it.

THE OLD ALIBI "The woman thou gavest me. SHE did it," has been the alibi of every husband from Adam down to the present day when things went wrong domestically and a marriage went on the rocks.

Apparently it does not occur to men that the way their marriages turn out depends far more upon themselves than it does upon their wives. They are, in reality, the responsible parties, being as a general thing older than the girls they marry, with more worldly knowledge and experience and being besides clothed with the authority that being the legal head of the house gives them.

But few men have the patience and the wisdom to do this. They prefer to trust their marriages to luck. They are not willing to work for results. They don't even attempt to train their wives along the lines they want them to follow. Then they wonder why their marriages are failures. They might as well wonder why they went bankrupt in a business that they trusted to chance.

Consider the things that men want most in marriage. First, the love of their wives. They want their wives to be affectionate, demonstrative, admiring, flattering, just as they were during the days of courtship, and to keep themselves looking glamorous.

THEY'RE NOT LOVERS But do they keep their wives lovers by being lovers themselves? You can't play Juliet without a responsive Romeo.

Men want their wives to be companions to them, but they never read with them; they never pal up with them; they never make confidantes of them; they never take them out in the evening unless they are badgered into doing it; they never even talk at home unless company comes in.

Men want their wives to be thrifty, but instead of teaching them how to live on a budget and spend wisely all that they do is to raise a row when the bills come in, and as the wife thinks that she had as well be hanged for a sheep as a lamb, she buys extravagantly.

A man wants his wife to be a good cook. Easy enough for him to secure himself delectable food if he will only take an interest in planning menus and discussing sauces, and if he will celebrate her triumphs instead of berating her because she can't make pies like mother used to make, and gobbling down a dinner she has spent hours in preparing without even noticing it.

Men want a cheerful, happy home, but how can it be happy unless the husband contributes part of the joy? No woman can smile enough for two, nor lift the gloom in a house that harbors a grouch. So, gentlemen, if you wish your marriage to be successes, you must get busy on the job yourselves.

For Tomorrow

A KEEN and incisive grasp of an unusual situation, or of some quite novel or intriguing circumstance, has power to vibrate the energies and initiative into high gear. A stroke of genius, a sudden inspiration, or other sensational twist to the wheel of fortune, may incidentally be a by-product of a creative action. However, it is advised that wild ambition could "overleap itself and fall on the other side" unless brakes be held in gear.

If It Is Your Birthday

Those whose birthday it is, may be prepared to jump into harness at the sudden and possibly dramatic turn of events, demanding keen and quick action, aggressive and strenuous, but not "out of bounds" as to rash or erratic grasp on exceptional factors. Make due evaluation of these unforeseen openings before plunging into dangerous or dynamic depths, too much to handle calmly.

A child born on this day, may have highly keyed and stimulated mentality and emotions, with its impulses and energies attuned to runaway actions and indulgences.

Day After Tomorrow

The astrological forecast is for a most intriguing state of affairs, unusual, bizarre, and not entirely clear of interpretation where sudden developments and curious situations arise. The mentality is obscure or confused in penetrating novel experiences or events, and the inner emotions, inspiration or vision, could also err as to conclusions.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Now is April dawning — March moving away... out along the hill, and in fancy we stand at a window to see the month go, as we have stood many a time watching some human go out from Alerleia. In this way, we "go a piece" with them as do small ones with each other when visiting, setting forth happily hand in hand though we go only in mind, to wish them well, to hope that their way may be unattended by any distressing annoyance or ill. So we see March "good-bye". It has been a charming guest. We think now of the calm beautiful hours, those softly belauded or warmly sun-lit with balmy winds, out of season, stepping lightly along the crying fields and wakening woodlands.

The quiet cusks when the countryside about was entering its rest, the serene mornings bearing towards us again a "fresh beginning."

We rose early this morning, before any of the family were yet about or any of the neighboring chimneys sent forth greetings to the new day then commencing to be spread rosiely above the dark of the tree-tops "Cown along." A blackbird whistled to us from an old spruce in the orchard, robin-voices cheered us from a near meadow, when at a chopping-block by the wood-shed we split a stick into kindling to hurry the breakfast-fire already sending its spiral of dark smoke into the grey-ness above.

Very still were our surroundings then, quiet and serene. Beyond the fields near and farther homesteads sat snugly beneath a dim veil that was but a remnant of the dawn. A plane appeared out of the sunrise and choosing a path out of numbers of silvery trails, disappeared, shortly into the west of "up the creek." We stopped a long moment creaking in the serenity of the scene. Presently the bustle of work would begin, our world about stretch and come to its feet. The robins continued their matins, praising a kindly Providence for a safe return — or was it only for this new day of lovely promise, full of expectation and opportunity? And then suddenly another sound faded in with the rest — one for which we had been listening of late. "Something happened!"

Teacher: "Tell me, Sammy, why do women live longer than men?"

Sammy: "I don't know, teacher, unless it's because paint is a great preservative!"

Woman: My husband talks in his sleep.

Doctor: I'll give you something to quiet him.

Woman: No, I want something to make him talk louder. I can't quite make out what he says.

That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

ALLERGY AS A CAUSE OF ULCERATIVE COLITIS

Nervousness and emotional disturbances have for a long time been considered the underlying cause of mucous colitis (chronic diarrhoea) with, perhaps, a few cases being caused by coarse foods.

Also the severe type of colitis, ulcerative colitis where ulcers with pus form in the large intestine (colon) was thought to be due in great part to nervousness and emotional disturbances.

While emotions are still believed to be the big factor, several research workers are now reporting that ulcerative colitis can be caused by allergy.

In Annals of Allergy, Dr. Albert H. Rowe, Oakland, California, reports a 12-year study which indicates that an eczematous inflammatory reaction to food and less often to pollen and at times to other substances breathed into the lungs, and also some drugs, is really the underlying cause.

When allergy is the only cause, the symptoms gradually grow less severe or disappear under allergy treatment. When complicating infection, thin blood, lack of proteins in the diet, or lack of vitamins are present, the treatment of these conditions is necessary to obtain results.

Just as eczema is known to be caused on the skin by allergy, so can lining of the colon become inflamed, swollen, and bleed easily from allergy. The redness, oozing and granulation following which are the main features of allergy of the skin, are also present in chronic ulcerative colitis.

Even the little ulcers or canker sores caused by digestive disturbances may appear on the lining of the colon.

What does the knowledge that allergy may be the underlying cause of ulcerative colitis and in some cases also, lack of proteins and vitamins, mean in the future treatment of this distressing disease? It will mean that less surgery will be used in the treatment (surgery at present is considered the best form of treatment).

Dr. Rowe reports the statistics of 10 patients with ulcerative colitis, 75 per cent of whom required hospital care. In 59 cases in which good cooperation was obtained, food allergy seemed to be the major cause in 54, food and pollen allergy in 4, and pollen in one case.

After his 12 years of investigation of causes and treatment of ulcerative colitis, Dr. Rowe concludes: "Surgery should be reserved for those cases when perforation (ulcer boring right through colon) and peritonitis threaten

The Age-Old Story

And Solomon stood before the altar of the Lord in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven; and he said, Lord God of Israel, there is no God like Thee, in heaven above, or on earth beneath, who keepeth covenant and mercy with Thy servants that walk before Thee with all their heart.

And now, O God of Israel, let Thy word, I pray Thee, be verified, which Thou spakest unto Thy servant David my father. But will God indeed dwell on the earth? behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain Thee; how much less this house that I have builded!
