

LAND ASSESSMENT.

Treasurer's Office,
Charlotte-Town, Prince Edward Island, March, 5th 1833.

In further pursuance of the Act of the General Assembly of this Island, made and passed in the Eleventh year of the Reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for raising a Fund, by an Assessment on Land, for erecting a Government House and other public Buildings within this Island."—I do hereby give Public Notice, that I have made Proclamation, according to the terms of the said Act, of the undermentioned Town Lots, Water Lots, Common Lots, Pasture Lots, and parts of Lots or Townships within this Island, in arrear for non-payment of the several sums due and owing thereon to His Majesty, under and by virtue of the before mentioned Act, viz.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the British American.

Four legs, and two voices; a most delicate monster! His forward voice now is to speak well of his friend; his backward voice is to utter foul speeches, and to detect.

SHARPSHARK.

MR. WHITE, —Although not an old woman, I am much tempted to think that I possess some knowledge of witchcraft, for little else could have called into life all at once, such a number of would-be Critics. By the etiquette of paper warfare, I am bound, I believe, to give Crito my first consideration.

He has, as I expected, grasped at the shadow but avoided the substance, he begins with a pitiful objection indeed,—a charge! I repeat it. Crito's first letter was a charge, in fact and in truth a direct and positive accusation. not I grant by taking it piecemeal, but the meaning to be gathered from the whole in substance and effect was nothing more or less than a charge or accusation in every sense of the word, and something wonderful and terrible would he concoct, did he but know how to set about it; he will I dare say recollect the fable of the mountain and the mole hill.

Now for the facts which he has so concisely and lucidly set forth. He tells us that he gathers all his information from whom? from the very persons that he has labored so hard to vilify, abuse, and discredit. He has in the first place discredited his own witness, and then brought him forward to prove his case. As for my conclusions, what conclusions does he suppose can be drawn from such premises, it would be imposing upon common sense to make any comment upon it.

It is very evident that he has not this time applied to his legal friend; the rest of his dispassionate and vastly critical composition rests on his own ipse dixit, all which he no doubt expects (as my friend 'Nemo' elegantly expresses it), the public to 'guzzle' on his own bare word, and bare enough it is.

Crito's opinion was not asked, for he had made a charge, accusation or imputation, (I hope his fastidious taste will now be satisfied) against the House of Assembly, and I called upon him to prove it: if he is not capable of doing so, he ought to have kept himself in his proper sphere, and not have made himself obnoxious to be called to account for the truth of a statement that he well knows he is not able to substantiate. I beg that this time he will understand me: in the first place he must prove his charge or imputation, and further prove the illegality of the pretended and much magnified alteration; in fact he must make out a fair case, Nemo tenetur accusare scipsum, I will then redeem my pledge.

From the glaring deficiencies in Crito's last letter, I am led to suspect that some one of his worthy associates framed it; whatever talent might have shewn itself in his first communication, there is a sad lacking of that essential requisite this time; —a rather refined specimen of the Club-room compositions with something of the same style. I entreat him to preserve a copy of his letter, as a piece unrivalled in its way, it may be of use should he hereafter endeavour to earn a reputation as a critic.

I will conclude with this veritable Gentleman, by advising him to keep to the point, and take care he does not again himself discredit his own statement.
