Government members could give no assurance as to when all the correspondence may be tabled. "It's a tremendous task for the secretarial staffs of a number of government departments," said Dr. George Dewar, minister of education.

Government should not "make cracks" about his state of mind. "If the government won't take suggestions," he said, "I don't know what the people put them in for."

On a standing vote, 17 Conservatives voted against introducing the resolution; eight liberals were in favor.

Dr. Bonnell was much more successful in moving four subsequent resolutions, which called for the tabling of federal-provincial correspondence.

The government agreed to table correspondence on vocational training and vocational grants since April 1, 1960; on the building of a causeway between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick since Sept. 16, 1959; on the Atlantic Development Board, and on the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act.
