

JUST IN TIME.

For Max and Faith had been betrothed for more than a year. Poor as they both were, Mrs. Lindsay loved them too well to object; though her heart grew heavy as she thought of their long days of waiting, which stretched before them like arid desert.

And, while I have been telling all Faith's secrets, she has been getting herself up in the pretty gown, and at last floated down stairs to meet her lover, with the brightest face imaginable. Max was a tall, fine-looking young fellow, with a world of determination in his dark eyes. He was brave and earnest. To him life was a battle in which he meant to come off conqueror.

And the days flew by on golden wings bringing nearer the hour when Faith must return to the city and the toil of the schoolroom. What was her consternation, one morning to receive a terse note informing her that the school board which employed her had determined upon a retrenchment of expenses for the coming season, and had proceeded to discharge a number of the teachers, herself among them. Poor Faith? Though the confinement of the schoolroom was irksome to her, she was nevertheless, dependent upon her situation for a livelihood, and it was taking away from her her sole support.

For a time she was stunned by the intelligence and knew not in which to turn. Then, more trouble came. A small sum which she and her mother had contrived to save between them was lost by the failure of the bank in which it was placed and it seemed truly "that troubles never come singly," for (and that was worst of all) Mrs. Lyndsey health began to suffer, and Faith thought, with a sudden shock of grief and terror, that her mother might be taken away.

These were dark days to Faith, and had it not been for Max—brave, true patient Max—she would have come near despairing.

It was one evening in early autumn. A bright wood-fire roared and crackled on the broad hearth; for the old house which had belonged to Aunt Patience was built with great, roomy fireplaces.

Mrs. Lyndsey and Faith and Max, who had dropped in for the evening, were gathered around a large table drawn up before the fireplace, and strewn with books, and work. For Faith's only dependence now was in her needle work.

Times are hard with the young physician; and he had, at last, made up his mind to tear himself from home and all he held dear, and go out into the new western country, and build up a practice. He loved Faith too well to willingly subject her to the trials and hardships of his new life. No! He would go forth alone—and work so hard, and strive so earnestly, that some day he would be ready for his wife, and Faith, he knew would be true.

"But I shall be old and gray by that time!" smiled Faith through her tears. "I shall love you just the same my darling!" the young man answered; and somehow, Faith could not doubt him to save her life!

So, sitting there before the bright fire the three discussed the proposed departure; till, at last, Faith dropped her tear-dimmed eyes upon her work, and quiet fell over all.

"Mamma," said the young girl suddenly, after a long, thoughtful silence, "what do you suppose Aunt Patience did with her money?"

Mrs. Lyndsey smiled. "I'm sure I have no idea, dear," she answered, "I considered that subject exhausted long ago. It was thought, however that she converted her ready money to jewels. I remember hearing her say that diamonds were the only safe investments which never depreciate, and that stones of value are never drugs in the market."

Imagine Aunt Patience bedecked with diamonds! laughed Faith, mischievously. "Max, just imagine, if you can, the antiquated lady whose portrait hangs yonder attired in jewels, and a fashionable ball-dress!"

Faith laughed again, and the others could not resist the contagion. For Faith, with her cheerfulness, bore her crosses with fortitude.

Remedy for Hard Times.

Stop spending so much on fine clothes, rich food and style. Buy good, healthy food, cheaper and better clothing; get more real and substantial things of life every way, and especially stop the foolish habit of running after expensive and quack doctors or using so much of the vile humbug medicine that does you only harm, and makes the proprietors rich, but put your trust in the greatest of all simple pure remedies, Hop Bitters that cures always at a trifling cost, and you will see better times and good health. Try it once. Read of it in another column.

ANALYTICAL SANITARY INSTITUTION, 54, Holborn-viaduct, E. C., London, Aug. 18, 1879

REPORT on the LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY:

"We have visited the bottling stores of Greenlees Brothers, and have selected from the vats, samples of their Lorne Highland Whisky, and have subjected them to careful examination and analysis. The samples were very fragrant, mellow, and of pleasant flavor, and possessed all the characteristics of pure and well-matured Scotch Whisky of the first quality."
