Such was the journey,
In that lonely, flat land.
Filled with pain,
Echoing sadness,
Dying before your eyes,
As you stumbled and fell.

And yet there was no void,
A singular lack of anything,
That has a name.
It was that complete sensation,
It was that solitude,
It was that despair,
It was that night,
It was so empty,
It was without essence.

We moved on.

Early the next morning,
In that barren land,
As the sun was not,
But again that was only natural,
We beheld a vision,
The first sign of the true reality,
On that sterile plain.
And yet it was not known to us,
nor to you,
For the horror of it was immense,
As was its eerie beauty,
And the mist it shot forth that seemed to say,

"We have died"
"We have never lived"
"We cannot go home."

And yet we passed by,
For the night had made us holy,
And that force that brings forth unity,
Had bred no compassion,
But corruption,
And the blood of the spul.

So it was when we finally entered the mountain foothills.

LISTEN TO ME

Refuse to be subjected To classification in accordance.
Order demands submission.
Feel the fluid freedom
Of the non-associated.
Regimentation crystalizes habit of thought,
To be preserved and then dulled.
Rise above the harmony
And destroy the pattern,
Which taps your mind.
Do not let this towering collossis
Over shadow you,
For if you do,
Your consciousness shall be committed to absurdity.
