Centennial Year-End Review Shows Surplus Of $16,039

The 1964 Centennial committee ended its big year with a surplus of $16,039 it was learned with the release of the year-end report of the committee's board of directors.

Dr. Frank MacKinnon, chairman of the centennial committee, submitted a letter of transmissal in which he described the Centennial as "a mean in which our citizens, particularly our young people, could enlarge their knowledge and appreciation of the history of our country. The educational and publicity value of the Centennial was so great that it should last for many years to come."

Dr. MacKinnon also mentioned the plans for the future. He said "This Centennial should be a dedication to the future. As Canada approaches the second century, the people of this province, along with fellow Canadians, should proceed with the spirit and faith of the founding fathers and of the other men who have built this nation."

Alan H. Holman, chairman of the finance and budget committee reported that the Centennial committee received a grant of $420,000 from the Province of P.E.I., and a grant of $100,000 from the Canadian Centennial Committee. These grants made up the original assets of $520,000. Total revenue was $505,074, to show a surplus of $16,039, over the expenditures of $489,035.

BALANCE SHEET

Mr. Holman also submitted a balance sheet to Jan. 31, 1965. This sheet showed assets of $27,608.32 and liabilities of $18,291.35. This leaves the committee with a net surplus of $9,316.79.

The report stated that the major historic event of the year was the visit of Her Majesty the Queen to officially open the Fathers of Confederation Memorial Centre.

This vast complex was constructed at a cost of 5½ million dollars which was provided half by the federal government and half by the provincial governments on the basis of 15 cents a head of their respective populations. The design was secured by means of a national architectural competition and the contract was awarded on the basis of a national tender.

The committee also announced that Charlottetown was the site of the longest national festival in Canada (May 18 — Sep 9). A slective representative in every field of Canadian art and entertainment was chosen from each and every province. A "first" was achieved when the committee flew a Vancouver festival production directly from Vancouver to Charlottetown.

Five local productions were presented by the committee. They included the Ladies of Confederation parade, Centennial Choir, Royal Canadian Legion choir, Centennial Youth chorus and Centennial pageant. The pageant was broadcast by the CBC television network in an hour-long presentation. In addition there were numerous other groups throughout the province that put on plays, pageants and concerts for local committees.

Special projects for 1964 included the restoration of Lucy Maude Montgomery's cottage near Clifton Corner, signs for centennial farms, flower beds depicting the five provincial delegates to the original conference, and hooked seat covers depicting the Island coat of arms for Government House.

Centennial plaques were presented to churches 100 years old in the province. Five churches earned this honor: Marshfield, Harrington, and South Granville Presbyterian Churches and Orwell Head and Trinity United (Charlottetown).

Large events during the year required national and local effort on a scale unprecedented in this province. They included the Drama Festival, meetings of the learned societies, the Lions International convention and Billy Graham Crusade.

The Directors of the Centennial committee were: Dr. Frank MacKinnon, chairman; Col. Frank J. Storey, vice-chairman; Alan Holman, finance chairman; Dr. L.I. Duffy, Mrs. J. Phillip Matheson, David Carnegy, Roy Boates and the late Hon. J.R. MacLean.

Psychiatrist Sees Danger From Some Programs On TV

OTTAWA (CP) — Dr. Karl Stern of Montreal, internationally - known psychiatrist, said Friday that television programs such as a CBC interview with American Nazi leader George Lincoln Rockwell are harmful to many TV viewers.

Dr. Stern told the Commons external affairs committee that the Rockwell program and others like it could arouse latent hostilities in viewers.

The worst thing about television was that big commercial interests paid psychiatrists to study the animal side of man's nature.

Dr. Stern was appearing before the parliamentary committee to testify about psychiatric disorders which cause strong individual prejudices and group hatred.

The committee is studying the problem of legislating against hate literature without ignoring the principles of free speech.

Hate literature is also being studied by a seven-member independent committee appointed in January by Justice Minister Guy Favreau.

Dr. Stern held the parliamentary committee spellbound for almost two hours as he reviewed psychiatric conditions which form the basis for group hatred.

Plow, Engine Are Derailed

SOURIS — A CNR train ran into heavy snow about half a mile outside Souris approximately 2 p.m. Saturday resulting in a partial derailment.

A double edge wedge plow which was at the first of the train turned at about a 90-degree angle with one half going into the North side of the track and the other half shearing into the lead engine, immediately behind it.

The train included a double wedge plow, two engines, oil car, two refridgerator cars, a caboose, a flanger, and a combination mail and passenger car.

The plow and the front part of the lead engine were the only parts of the train to leave the track. The plow was lifted off its own wheels and one side was badly torn. The front part of the lead engine was badly smashed. A small section of the tracks was uprooted. There was no estimate of damages.

A repair crew from Charlottetown worked all Saturday night and mid-way into Sunday afternoon before all was back to normal.
