

Farewell Party Held For Miss Faye Peardon

On Friday evening, September 21st, the playmates of Miss Faye Peardon held a farewell party in her honor at the home of Anna MacGillivray.
Dancing and singing was much enjoyed by all present. An address was read by Sandra Llewellyn and Shirley Stewart, who on behalf of all present, presented her with a signed ring. Faye acknowledged her gift very graciously. Lunch was then served by the young ladies. The party ended by singing "For She's a Jolly Good Fellow, and Auld Lang Syne."

double the number anticipated when it first goes into full operation.
All the government buildings, schools and a portion of the business and residential districts will be on a $3,000,000 centrally-operated, steam-heated sewage and heating grid. The above-ground pipes, put in at a cost of $50 to $100 a foot, will serve half the town, but the system will cost the householder no more than a separate heating plan.
Most of the government employees and better-paid natives are expected to live in the "serviced" area. In the "un serviced" area, water will be piped past each house in summer from a small lake above the town and obtainable from "neighborhood" supply tanks in winter.

New Aklavik Is A New Town And Will Have A New Name

By RUSSELL ELMAN
Canadian Press Staff Writer
NEW AKLAVIK, N.W.T. (CP)—A $30,000,000 town is rising on a tree-covered bluff overlooking the muddy Mackenzie River more than 200 miles north of the Arctic Circle.
Scheduled for completion by September, 1959, the ambitious project by the federal government is rapidly emerging from a drawing-board dream to physical reality.
This summer, East Three—as the site is known locally and officially—for the first time took on the appearance of a town. Roads were finished, docks installed, oil tanks erected and the first houses built.

MIDNIGHT SUN HELPS
Working at top speed beneath the midnight sun, a force of 150 whites, Eskimos and Indians each day put up a new gleaming-white wooden cabin with a brightly-colored roof to form the nucleus of a huge construction camp that next year will start an all-out building program.
From the air, the site with its curving, irregular roads, lined by green-leaved birches, might resemble a new subdivision on the outskirts of a large city in southern Canada rather than an Arctic settlement, 1,200 miles as the crow flies northwest of Edmonton.
Its neat little houses bear no likeness to the ramshackle homes and tents of old Aklavik, 35 miles west.

Theoretically, New Aklavik, or East Three, is a town-moving project. As government activity in the delta area and along the Arctic coast expanded, facilities at old Aklavik became increasingly inadequate.
OLD TOWN HANDICAPPED
Built on a low-lying peninsula on the western branch of the Mackenzie, the old town is inaccessible for nearly three months of the year during the spring break-up and the fall freeze-up. Its streets usually are a soupy mire; there is no modern plumbing and no land airport.
Already over-crowded, the town, with 350 permanent residents and with sometimes more than 1,000 at peak periods such as Easter, has no room to expand, being almost surrounded by marsh, lake and river.
The old town was built on soil a few inches above permafrost—ground permanently frozen. The heat of the buildings causes permafrost to melt, often resulting, because of poor drainage, in serious heaving and sagging.

EXPAND BASES
MADRID (Reuters) — U.S. Air Force Secretary Donald A. Quarles announced Monday the United States will spend up to $350,000,000 on its air and naval bases in Spain. He told a press conference that "certain facilities for fighters and bombers are programmed for bases at Torrejon, Zaragoza and Moron."

Russia Promises To Give Technical Aid To China

By DAVID CHIPP
PEIPING (Reuters) — Russia has promised to help lift Communist China from technological backwardness to the "zenith" of modern scientific advances.
The promise came Monday from Anastas Mikoyan, a first deputy premier, in an address to the eighth congress of the Chinese Communist party. He also reaffirmed the close friendship between the two countries.
"The enemy very much desired to create a breach — however small — in Sino-Soviet relations and friendship," Mikoyan said. "But they viewed this friendship in the light of capitalist relations. There has never been a friendship in the world comparable with that between the great people of our two nations and our two powerful parties."
CAN DEPEND ON AID
The Soviet leader said Communist China could depend on Russian aid in building up the country.
"The Chinese can draw from our experience and proceed with their construction without stopping through a preparatory stage, when they construct their country with the co-operation of the Soviet Union and other socialist countries.
"They can skip the intermediate stage and pass from technological backwardness directly to the highest technological level up to the zenith of the highest scientific and technical advancement."
WANT FORMOSA
The congress also heard Marshal Chu Teh, vice-chairman of Mao Tze-tung's government emphasize that Communist China would seek a settlement of the Formosa dispute by peaceful methods.
"A peaceful settlement, he said, "is in the interest of the Chinese people and the people in Taiwan (Formosa) province, as well as in the interests of civil and military authorities on Taiwan."
He called upon civil and military authorities on the Nationalist-held island to "take a patriotic stand and return to the fold of the motherland."
