

Angry French Colonists Pelt Mollet With Stones

By MICHAEL WEIGALL
ALGIERS, Algeria, (Reuters)—Angry French settlers pelted French Premier Guy Mollet with stones and refuse when he arrived here Monday and then followed him to his official residence, where 1,000 demonstrators fought a pitched battle with heavily-armed police.

Their violent reception precipitated the resignation of Gen. Georges Catroux—the man Mollet appointed as new resident general to Algeria and whom he intended to personally install Thursday.

Nine policemen and soldiers and five demonstrators were injured in the riots. Monday night paratroopers took up positions outside the premier's residence.

Mollet told a press conference he will not appoint a successor to Catroux immediately.

French settlers feared Catroux, known for his liberal views, would "sell out" their interests to placate rebellious Moslems.

URGED TO RESIGN
Catroux, still in Paris, resigned when he heard of the violent demonstrations. Reliable sources said he was strongly urged to do so by French President Rene Coty.

The centre of Algerians looked like a city under siege Monday night as police set up roadblocks and stationed armored cars and trucks throughout the city.

Police used rifle butts and tear gas in repeated charges to break up the demonstrators.

Obviously shaken by the violence of the demonstrations, Mollet said later he had accepted Catroux's resignation in order "not to aggravate the drama which is already dividing Algeria."

He is making his visit to Algeria in a personal bid to end the rebel warfare which is pinning down 200,000 French troops in the North African territory.

"DEATH TO MOLLET"
About 10,000 settlers shouted "Death to Mollet" and "Catroux to the gallows" and urged against police lines when the premier arrived to place a wreath at the war memorial in the middle of Algiers. Later the wild through tramped the wreath to bits.

Explosions rocked the square as police threw tear-gas grenades into the shouting crowd. Mollet, hustled by aides and police officers, quickly backed to his car as a double row of police in black raincoats charged again to push back the demonstrators.

His car, guided by spahi horsemen and police on motorcycles, zig-zagged through a network of side streets as the ceremony ended in confusion.

The premier, who had said he will stay up three weeks to solve France's No. 1 problem, planned to hold talks with European and Moslem leaders and French officials.

DEMAND HOME RULE
About 15,000 rebels are waging hit-and-run warfare against French rule in support of demands for home rule similar to that granted to Tunisia and Morocco, France's other North African territories.

On the other hand, French settlers threatened disturbances if any concessions are made to Algerian nationalism or any change made in the present status of Algeria—an integral part of France which elects deputies to the National Assembly in Paris.

Another Navigation Record Established

BAIE COMEAU, Que. (CP)—The freighter Elin Hope set another record Monday for late navigation on the St. Lawrence river.

The freighter arrived here from New York to pick up a cargo of Quebec North Shore Paper Company.

In previous years no ship has ever left this port on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river later than Jan. 10.

The Elin Hope and the freighter Darton both broke that record last month by carrying cargoes of newsprint to New York.

Says Communications Have Broken Down Between People

"It is one of the great tragic phenomena of modern times that human communications have not developed to anything like the same extent as physical communications," said Dr. Frank MacIntyre, Principal, of P.W.C. at a meeting of the Charlottetown Baptist Men's Association Monday night.

Contrasting the great advances in transportation and information with the lack of direct contact between individuals and cultures he went on to say that society depends almost exclusively on the great modern instruments of mass communication.

We get our news from syndicated newspaper columns; our opinions are usually based, not on individual study, but on the views of commentators; we tend to read "digests" rather than actual books; and always there is someone else's summary of events or description of individuals. Radio and television are unparalleled instruments of mass production of entertainment and facts and opinions. Even modern education is based on the same principles of summaries, digests, carefully edited facts, standard texts and curricula, and common methods.

DANGER OF MISUSE
There is no question of the enormous benefits all these mass media can bring to people everywhere. The danger is that they may be misused by those who hand out the information or entertainment, and by those who use them. They can become masters of people very easily; Goebbels proved that. And people can depend on them so much that they cease to seek their own entertainment and facts and, indeed, even cease thinking for themselves.

With respect to individual communication, most sociologists agree that the art of conversation is dead. This is an age of acquaintances not friends. The literary societies, Bible classes, debating clubs, soirees, dinner parties, public lectures of fifty years ago have given way to the movie, the cocktail party, the bridge party and the numerous forms of spectator entertainment where people don't get a chance to talk and argue and where one rarely gets a chance to be with another person long enough to get to know him well. With all the modern means of bringing people together, there is still a great need for something that will encourage intimate association and mutual understanding rather than mere casual acquaintance.

On the social side, and the relationship between groups, the danger is standardized, censored, and regulated information. Individual and group judgment soon disappear if people must only know and do what other people think is good for them. And the social consciousness which so many wish to

Says Argentina Happy To Be Rid Of Peron

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP)—A good military man has no interest in politics, Lieut. George Labaro of Buenos Aires said Monday night but his Argentine countrymen were happier since the revolution that deposed dictator Juan Peron.

Lieut. Labaro is spokesman for 15 men of the Argentine Air Force held over in St. John's enroute home from England with three newly purchased Vickers Viking aircraft.

They were halted here by a storm Sunday and waited for a fourth new Viking and the plane that flew them to England to catch up. The two aircraft stayed behind in the Azores for minor repairs.

They hope to take off for Argentina via New York and Cuba today.

In Argentina now, Lieut. Labaro said in an interview, "is very good life. No problems politic, nothing. Our people are very happy. I think the people are very happy than with Peron."

He said it was good La Prensa was being published by its owners again. The great Buenos Aires daily was silenced by the Peron regime and resumed publication since Lieut. Labaro and his companions left to take delivery of the Vikings.

Princess Tours TV Studios

LONDON (Reuters) — A happy Princess Margaret sang "You Can't Chop Your Poppa Up In Massachusetts" here Monday during a 1 1/2-hour tour of the BBC's television studios.

The princess, in a mink coat, joined in singing the line from the American revue "New Faces" as she watched the cast from a glassed-in control gallery.

Three times during her visit the cameras swung on the princess and broadcast her picture to watching millions.

Caught up in the excitement of "looking in" from the inside, the princess could not resist making one suggestion for a program change.

In a duet where band leader Billy Cotton suggested to comedian Max Bygraves that his hat was too small, she immediately said: "They should have changed hats there."

Later the program producer said: "We should have thought of that one."

U.S. Commandant In Berlin Protests Abduction Attempts

By GARY LEVY
BERLIN (Reuters)—The United States commandant in Berlin Monday sent "a strong note of protest" to the Soviet commandant about "two attempted abductions" by Communist East German police in the U.S. zone even as news of a fresh abduction reached West Berlin.

Western police said that East German secret servicemen last Saturday spirited away Robert Bialek, a one-time leading Communist, from the British zone of West Berlin. Bialek fled from East Germany after quarrelling with party chief Walter Ulbricht. The police believe he was drugged and kidnapped for carrying out an underground campaign against Ulbricht.

The protest about the two previous attempted abductions came from U.S. Maj.-Gen. Charles L. Dasher.

An announcement said the attempts were made last Saturday afternoon against a former East German policeman, his sister-in-law and her two young daughters, aged 4 and 5.

Dasher asked Soviet commandant Maj.-Gen. P.A. Dibrova "to put a stop to such actions and to take measures to punish the police-men who were responsible."

The abduction attempts, made as the four were walking on a U.S. sector road bounding East Berlin, failed.

CAPTORS USED DRUGS
Western police reported Bialek was abducted, probably under duress, from a room in the British sector belonging to another refugee, a former East German police officer.

Bialek, who is 38, was a co-founder of the East German Communist youth movement and his leader in Saxony until 1948.

After his feud with Ulbricht, he lost all party and government jobs and worked as a laborer.

He fled to West Berlin in August, 1953, after taking part in the anti-Communist riots of the previous June.

New Geological Map Available

OTTAWA (CP)—A new 50 cent map showing the geology of Canada in 36 colors has been issued by the geological survey of Canada, the mines department announced Monday.

The map depicts for the first time the geology of Newfoundland, Labrador and northern Arctic islands. Previous maps showed the country's geology only as far north as Devon Island.

The new map incorporates the findings of 75 geological parties sent into the field between 1944 and 1953 by the geological survey.

Another geological feature shown is the Labrador trough, where huge quantities of iron ore have been discovered from south of Schefferville in new Quebec-Labrador to Ungava Bay.

Copies may be obtained from the office of the director of the geological survey of Canada in Ottawa.
