A good education (as family security) is in the cards.

And it is almost impossible to sustain a single-hearted romance at a steady pitch for that length of time, and keep the bloom on.

Thus the wise precaution for keeping the potentials of lasting true love or fond friendship alive, is to cherish this special attraction as the choicest thread (if you like) but not the only thread in the fabric of your social life during the last lap of adolescence.

Your interest in each other should thrive and endure in proportion as you both continue to move ahead, on the path of growth, along individual if parallel lines, each the center of his own personal network of lively, worthwhile social affiliations.

That way, each will be an enrichment to the other's experience, in hours of companionship, as wouldn't be possible if one were tagging wistfully after the other, in fact or fancy, with no other meantingful youthful relationships, during the lengthy period of "now deferred."

It seems fortunate that you will be entering college soon, a challenging new environment for you, which will (or should) do much to disperse the present concentrated intensity of your appreciation of Ronald.

MARY HAWORTH

Moderation Influences Survival Of Romance

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a girl 17, planning to enter college next fall. I have very strong feelings for a wonderful boy who has brains to match his character. He has an outgoing personality and a broadminded philosophy of life.

I am not saying that I love him, only that I believe I could, later on.

The sad part is, he is 16 and will be a junior in high school when I am a freshman in college. This doesn't really bother us, however, mainly because we are too taken-up with the fun of being together at shows and dances events or just having good conversations. We share the same beliefs and I admire him most of all in church.

Do you think such a relationship as ours can continue, not necessarily always in the same key? Can it survive?

Everyone says I am very mature for my age and behave as I should. Yet Ronald is much more intelligent than I and has a fabulous future planned. I want very much to be part of his future. But I don't want to tie him down in any way. I only want him to make the most of himself.

He loves football and already has been guaranteed a scholarship. So you see why I am sure he will be a success.

I've always dated large circles of boys and never settled down to one. But I have no desire to date others now. Is this wrong? How can our relationship survive, as I want it to? Thank you.

S.F.

Dear S.F.: I suggest that the relationship has an excellent chance of surviving and maturing into lifelong affection, either as friends or marriage partners.

But I think its survival into adult years will depend upon the practice of moderation as regards dating each other, and governing the expression of personal feeling, in the meantwhile.

At ages 16 and 17, obviously you've both got years to go (let's say 10 years for Ronald, more or less) before sensible marriage, solidly founded on a

AIRPLANE passengers with little to do except "sit," get a bit restless in about three hours.

An American breakfast on the plane is served on a linen-lined tray, and includes a wine glass of fruit juice of choice; an egg entree on an 8½ inch plate; a hot roll with butter; jelly and plenty of coffee, tea or milk.

Breakfast Continental style includes fruit juice, hot rolls, butter, jelly and a beverage (good idea for weekend guests at home).

If passengers have an early breakfast, they will be ready for a snack in 3 hours (corresponding to the coffee or tea break at home).

To make possible this 3 -hour service, the most difficult part is to keep order in the galley. This means eternal vigilance. If all returned items are not put back in place before time to prepare to serve lunch, there is no working room left — just as in a home kitchen.

About four in the afternoon brings another snack service; sometimes fruit, assorted cheeses, crisp crackers and a choice of tea, coffee or juice.

Later comes dinner. And after that, for passengers depleting late in the evening, a luxurious buffet is set up on that trusty helper, the aisle wagon, with chicken or other meat or salad sandwiches made with fresh rolls; a fruit basket; petits fours and tea or coffee.

Well - Trained

These remarkable hostesses are busy young women. But they are so well - trained, their work so well - organized, their hands so deft, practice so perfect, that the doing is seemingly effortless. (Practice can make work at home perfect, too.)

"But we homemakers are constantly interrupted!" do I hear you say?

Our friendly hostess would smile. Interruptions are constant on a plane trip.

"But learn to take them without resentment and be quickly helpful," they would advise. "Smile and do your best; you'll get through."

VOW Adopts Peace Pledge

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — "Are you sure you want to deport me?" asked Mrs. Linus Pauling.

"Yes," answered a Netherlands immigration officer.

"I think you may regret it," said the wife of the famed United States scientist, attempting to enter The Netherlands to attend the May 12-14 NATO women's peace force conference in The Hague.

Next day the two met again.

"Do you remember what I said yesterday?" asked Mrs. Pauling.

"Yes" the officer signed, as she passed into the country.

The story was told Saturday at the annual Voice of Women convention by Mrs. Kathleen Macpherson of Toronto, one of three Canadian and two British delegates temporarily refused admission to The Netherlands.

The others, Mrs. Jo Shepherd of Toronto and Mrs. Juliette Shapiro of Regina, were with her on the platform as she reported her experiences at the women's conference, held in The Hague during the NATO ministerial conference there.

"The misunderstanding was cleared up in 24 hours due to prompt action on the part of VoW officers and friends, Canadian and Dutch government officials . . . "she said.

The 140 VoW members at the meeting here adopted a peace pledge adopted by 1,500 women at The Hague conference opposing formation of multilateral nuclear force.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Poplars, Of All Trees, Have The Most Magic

Once more in another springtime and year, we have welcomed the rounds of leaves back to the poplars about. And happily because of all the trees, these to us have the most magic. When all else is still, when not a breath of wind moves, the poplar leaves suddenly stir, as though touched to action by some unseen and passing caress... So pretty now is the new lace of all the trees and charming the now - misting green of the late - leafing oaks.

Bright and colorful, indeed very gay are the flowerings we have from these bulbs that with Alex's assistance we planted last fall. How rewarding now these are. Even to have planted only a bare dozen is to be over - paid for the work it entailed. The crocuses had their day - dainty and colorful in the then rubbiness about. Of those which have followed, as a bedding - flower the hyacinths are especially attractive, in beautiful shades from the pastels to the bright, deep colors, and among the daffodils and tulips also eye-catching, quite the highlight at present in our border.

These days, naturally the pace of the cropping in fields of the name has considerably accelerated. All this day tractors and machines lifted and spread manure, lifting away the field - heaps, cleaning the polebarn and leaving tidy this and that stall and stable about. Now on into the night cultivating is being done.

Mack came by from a field in the dusk to refuel the tractor. And then, its course marked by the lights, went to prepare a grainland for seeding. As it happens these years grain is the principal crop grown on fields of the name: grain and grasses, with an added patch of mangels for pigs, and a poem, "Dawn of Reality". A hymn closed the worship service.

The president, Mrs. Robert Heaney occupied the chair for the business session. The U.C.W. Purpose was repeated in unison. A total of 30 members responded to roll call with a verse of scripture containing the word "Give." There were two visitors present.

Mrs. Ralph Howard was appointed to replace the card secretary who asked to have some one else take over the office. One member expressed her thanks for a get well card. The Community friendship secretary, Mrs. Justin Woodside reported 17 home calls, 45 cards, 18 treats, and 30 hospital calls during the month. The treasurer, Miss Vivian Woodside gave her report, and Mrs. Reginald Dennis was appointed to act as treasurer for the summer months. A new nominating committee was appointed, Mrs. Arthur Proffit, Mrs. Keith Warren, Mrs. Roy Thompson and Mrs. Justin Woodside.

It was decided to pack a box of good used clothing for overseas relief, articles to be left at the home of the supply secretary, Mrs. Chester Howard. Mrs. Edward Ginter and Mrs. Heath Mayhew volunteered to help with the packing.

Mrs. Edison Heaney will have charge of the program for next meeting on chapter 9 of the "Word and the Way." Roll call will be responded to with a verse of scripture containing the word "Courage."

Mrs. Edward Ginter presented the program on "Citizenship," with an interesting talk on "Women's Rights."

The meeting closed with a hymn and the Mizpah benediction in unison.

Consumers Association Told Foreign Materials In Food

By BRENDA LARGE

OTTAWA (CP)—Mouse droppings, bees, string and other foreign materials have been turning up lately in Canadian canned goods, 100 women delegates to the Consumers' Association of Canada annual meeting were told Tuesday.

Mrs. R. W. Morningstar of Toronto, chairman of the association's national food committee, said numerous complaints about foreign materials in canned goods had been received by her committee.

She later told a reporter that a Saskatoon consumer reported finding mouse droppings in a can of spaghetti.

"This was later verified by the provincial food and drug inspector.

"Two Saskatchewan organizations — the Co - operative Women's Guild and the Federated Co-operatives — have protested to the association about the presence of foreign canned goods. We have also received complaints from other parts of Canada."

Other foreign materials found in canned goods during the last year and reported to the committee included worms, cores, hairs and pieces of hide.

Mrs. Morningstar said she did not believe the cases reported to the committee were isolated instances. This was "fairly general" across the country.

STRICTER INSPECTION

As a result of the committee's findings, the association delegates will be asked to pass a resolution today requesting stricter inspection of Canadian food processing plants.

The 25,000 - member association also received complaints regarding inconsistency in the quality of canned salmon. It is expected to renew its efforts to have a system of compulsory grading for canned fish set up in Canada.

Among the many packaging problems brought to the attention of the food committee in the last year were short measures of liquids in wax cartons and deceptive packaging of tinned nuts.

With regard to the association's continuing campaign against the use of trading stamps in Canada, Mrs. Morningstar presented U.S. figures purporting to show that 55 per cent of American customers are indifferent to the stamps.

SEVERE PENALTIES

In her annual report, President Mrs. A. F. W. Plumptre of Ottawa said some druggists are disregarding their legal and moral responsibilities by selling certain prescription drugs without prescriptions. They should be liable to more severe penalties "than the fine of a small amount of dollars."

UCW Will Pack Used Clothing For Overseas

Mrs. Edward Ginter conducted the worship service at the regular meeting of the Margate United Church Women held in the church vestry. The opening hymn and Bible reading were followed by the meditation "Credentials of a Christian".
