UNCLE SAM'S SECRET SERVICE.

How It Deals With Counterfeiters' Products and Minted Coins.

The secret service is a bureau in the treasury department, whose head is an expert in detecting and exposing counterfeiters and the ramifications of their trade.

Up in one of the numerous rooms of the treasury department we find a small chamber which is a museum in which are collected the tools, pictures and work of the counterfeiters.

To those whose curiosity is excited by the queer exhibit the police chief clerk is always ready to give information.

"There are many little things of interest in the service outside of dry statistics. For instance, it is not generally known that it is against the law to print, photograph, engrave or paint a facsimile of a United States note or coin, but such is the case."

"We have here," he continued, pointing to a large placard bearing an engraving representing a $2 bill, "a picture which was placed in a window to advertise some $2 shoes. This drawing was seized by the officers. A photographer had an advertisement a representation of a $5 note, and this also was confiscated."

"This photograph of a man seated in a chair and held by two others is the picture of a famous counterfeiter. He was determined we should not catch his face, so, you see, he has wrinkled it up so as to be almost unrecognizable."

"One of the easiest ways of counterfeiting is to change a bill from one denomination to another—say a $10 bill to a $100 note, or $100 to $200. But, as a rule, large bills are not those most often counterfeited, for the reason that it is much easier to pass a $2 note undetected than it is one for $100. A small note passes unnoticed where a large one would be challenged."

"Of course the counterfeiters are fine operators, and their work is simply wonderful. Still, they never get as good a specimen as that put out by the government. The lines in the portraits are not so fine as ours."

"When a fellow has made false money his first object is to give it an old look, so he can more easily escape detection. Some of them will rub a new note in the sweat from an overworked horse, as this gives a soiled, oily look, and others use coffee or tea to stain it."

"We have in the department here a lady who is remarkably gifted with such a delicate sense of touch that it is simply impossible to pass a counterfeit note. One note which had passed the subtreasury in New York was detected and thrown out by her feeling through her hands."

"Murdering coin is a foolish habit with some people, and they do not seem to realize that they are practically withdrawing it from circulation. For instance, the 10 cent pieces used for ladies' bangles, or on which initials are cut, can only be used every time a stamp is stamped on them, so they are no longer represent the coin of the realm."—Washington Cor. Philadelphia Times.

Advertising Agents. Newspaper advertising agents are the ministers of the advertising business. You can get a correct idea of the sort of work they perform by imagining the case of a man living in Boston who has a certain piece of property to dispose of. He has no reason to believe will find a market in Omaha quicker than elsewhere. But as he is ignorant of the comparative merits of the papers published in Omaha, perhaps he does not even know their names—he calls in the service of the agent who is a master of such information. The agent takes the copy of the advertisement as it put in type, sends a proof and order each of the Omaha papers which use the service, and he is agreed to use. If the advertisement appears in the papers properly, and that every concession is made, the agent is satisfied. If not, he will advise the advertiser to use another. For all this service, the advertiser pays nothing. He is only asked to pay the paper's regular rates. The agent gets his remuneration in the form of a commission, which is allowed him by the publisher.—John Irving Homer's Lecture.

Lamb's Favorite Authors. Charles Lamb was one of the many admirers of Isaac Walton's "Complete Angler," and he has paid that work a most honorable tribute of praise. "It would sweeten a man's temper," he exclaimed, "at any time to read it. It would Christianize a very discontented, angry passion." But his favorite authors, after all—the sweetest names, and which carry a perfume in the memory—were old King Marlowe and Drayton, Beaumont and Jonson, and Spenser, and in one of his essays he calls the time he spent at Binksway, and the cheerful storehouse in whose job will draw seat I used to sit and read Cowley with the grout before me, and the lun and flapping of that one solitary wasp that ever haunted it about me.—All the Year Round.

An Exploited Theory. "Hi say, Mr. Pomeroy," observed a colored Austin expression, who was the unfortunate owner of a bulky note which some one had unloaded upon him in the melancholy trade, "didn't I hear you say a good many times that dare 'as reason in all things?" "Yes, Sam," replied Mr. Pomeroy, "I believe that precept and have never been afraid to say so."

"Well, den, I jess wish you'd cum out in de alley an' look at my hule. He's den been stuck dar for de las' hour."—Texas Siftings.

The Paradise of Bunko. What an admirable place for the cheaters of industry of all kinds must Toronto be! A lady having had a dream there that whoever drank of the water in her cistern would escape cholera, 20,000 people passed through her premises at a penny a head in a couple of days. O Sancta Simplicitas! what a town that must be for the confidence men and the other little fellows that have no mind under suspicion elsewhere! What a place, if not to dream of, to dream in!—London Illustrated News.

For Luck. The common opinion is that animals do not know enough to be superstitious, but the Indianapolis Journal records a possible exception. "I tell you what," said Mr. Watts, "I saw an exhibition of animal intelligence today!" "What was that?" said Mr. Potts. "Why, a bridal party started from the house across the street from where I live, and one of the horses threw a shoe. Now what do you think of that?"

BOOKKEEPING MADE EASY.

A New York Druggist Tells How He Keeps His Customers' Accounts.

"No, I never keep any books," said a druggist the other day, in the intervals of selling a 2 cent stamp to one customer, 5 cents worth of Rochelle salts to another, a postal card to a third, some opaline pills to a fourth and a glass of soda water to an aspiring member of the rising generation.

"I don't bother myself with bookkeeping at all," he went on, "although a considerable number of my customers run small accounts with me. If I had to bother with books, it would be a miserable life, for my life would be miserable indeed, for I have enough other things to bother me, and you know it is absolutely necessary for a druggist to keep a close watch. If he makes a mistake, he may kill somebody and be sent to the state prison for it. Why, even the handwriting of physicians that we have to decipher in reading prescriptions is enough to bring the gray hairs to anybody's head. If I could have my way, I would require every candidate for the degree of doctor of medicine to give evidence of his ability to write a legible hand, and would not let any candidate take an oath never to write a prescription that couldn't be read with ease. Of course the fact that prescriptions are written in Latin doesn't make much, if any difference to druggists, but really I can see no reason for the use of Latin, for most intelligent people nowadays know the Latin of prescriptions, and when a doctor writes a prescription on a reading it, or else they will insist on their physician telling them. People sometimes ask me what a prescription contains, but druggists of my view, never give anything of that kind away. It is against the rule of the profession."

"But I wish to get out of you my key at all. That was about my way of keeping accounts. Here in this drawer, you see, are a number of slips of paper. Each one of them contains the account of one of my customers, and some of them, you perceive, are very large. I keep no other records. When a man comes in to pay his bill, I have everything here on the slip bearing his name, and it takes only a moment to foot it up. When he hands me the money, I hand him the slip, and there is an end of the whole matter. Nothing could be simpler, could it? Certainly nothing could be more so. My account books, however, are not so simple, could they be anything to complain of. The system is capable of indefinite extension. If the number of my customers who keep accounts should largely increase, I should have to keep the slips in alphabetical order, or something of the kind. Really, this is bookkeeping—if it can be called so—reduced to its lowest terms."

At this point the druggist turned away to compound two from a prescription. A woman wanted made up in a hurry, and just then the door opened to admit two more of the postage stamp brigade, which was the good and the bad news. One of his desire to accommodate their friends came then to tolerate at all. But some low postage stamps and other things are so specially associated in the minds of urban Americans with drug stores, and the druggist can only submit, although he realizes that every time a stamp is stamped on a stranger the purchaser is really imposing on his good nature.—New York Tribune.

Substitute For Afternoon Tea.

A Houston street car had just crossed Avenue B yesterday afternoon, when the driver suddenly whirled the brake around, pulled in the horses and cried at the top of his voice:

"Hey, Tom! Hello, Tom!"

A young man who was walking along the street with a girl came to a stop, gazed around for a moment, and then ran into the street and jumped on the car.

"Hello, Jack, old boy! How are you?"

"Sheek hands for nearly a minute, and then the young man said:

"Did you hear me, Tom? Queer! Yes, that's her. 'C'm here, Annie!"

The girl walked through the mud and stepped on the front platform, blushing like a rose.

"This is Jack. Oh, he knows all about peck. Jack, come up and see us some night, will you?"

Then the conductor rang the bell half a dozen times, and Tom and his wife jumped off, and the car started on its way. The two gentlemen grumbledly went to the car, but the delay had been about.—New York Sun.

Sheep Skinning Bears.

The American black bear goes to a pasture, kills the sheep, skins it and takes the hide and the carcase to the market. He declares that a bear can take the hide of a sheep as neatly as a butcher can, and as it is not worth his outfit after, but simple custom, he does not see any point in burdening himself with a heavy fleece, and as he saves it for the man whose proprietary interest in the hide is in transferring to himself—that is, he leaves the job for the man if the man is not so inconsiderate as to interrupt the bear before he has finished stripping it from the sheep. If the man intrudes, he will lose the pelt as well as the mutton, for the bear doesn't want to hurt the man, neither does he intend to surrender the dinner he came to get; so he carries off the sheep, pelt and all, and skins it when he gets home.—New York Herald.

A Recluse Purchases.

When the effects of the Duchess of Somerset were sold by auction in London some years ago, an extraordinary collection of wearing apparel was brought to light. Among these were lace and other handkerchiefs, 2,000 pairs of gloves, 500 Indian and other shawls, 600 pairs of silk stockings, and dresses of all kinds of 40 years' fashion. The owner of these had for 20 years before her death shut herself up in her house, living the life of a recluse, yet she ordered regularly from dressmakers at each change of season the dresses she would have worn if still mixing in society. Every three months she dressed in court costume, as if going to a reception and would walk up and down her own rooms, in imagination playing the part she no longer really acted.—London Cor. respondent.

The Microbe That Causes Baldness.

Dr. Saymonne has made for himself an undying fame by discovering and naming the parasite that causes baldness in the human species and loss of hair and in the lower animals. He calls the creature "bacillus carvovorus," a name which suggests that it is a parasite related to the "cannibal microbe." The man who discovers an exterminator for "carnivorous" will deserve more fame than the leopards. M. D. who has discovered and named the creature.—St. Louis Republic.

Cataract, Kidney Complaint, Heart Failure, Liver Troubles.

"I think it my duty to voluntarily tell what Hood's Saraparilla has done for myself and wife. Last spring my wife was in a very bad way with kidney complaint; fell

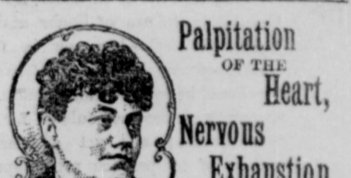

Miserable All the Time and could hardly get around the house. She began to take Hood's Saraparilla, and in one week she was improving. When she had taken but three bottles of Hood's Saraparilla she was cured of that dreadful disease. As for me, I was troubled with Catarrh, Heart Failure and Liver Complaint. Suffered so intensely that

I Could Not Sleep at night, nor get any rest through the day. As soon as I lay down, my heart would beat so hard that I would have to get up. I had very severe pains in the small of my back and sides, as if by lead like a load of black birds all sitting at once. So you see I was in a very bad way. I had never used Hood's Saraparilla before, but I was told that it was a very good medicine, and I bought a box. I took it for a week, and in a few days I was able to get up and about the house. I took it for a month, and in that time I was cured of all my troubles. I feel like a new man, and I can now sleep better than I have for a year, can eat and drink like I used to. We thank you for this medicine, and we recommend it to all who are suffering from any of the above diseases. H. C. RICHARDSON, Boston, Mass.
