THE DAILY EXAMINER

AUGUST 11, 1900.

"LIBERAL" OR "GOVERNMENT"?

THE JOURNAL, of Ottawa, an independent newspaper, draws a broad and, as we think, an eminently proper distinction between the Liberals and the Government of which Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. Tarte, Mr. Blair and Mr. Sifton are the chiefs. The London Advertiser—one of the subsidized organs—had declared that "The Huntingdon Gleaner is no more a Liberal paper than the Toronto World or Hamilton Spectator,"—though the Gleaner had been an out-and-out supporter of the Liberal party when the Conservatives were in power. But after the Liberals obtained office and the Government deliberately violated the principles and broke the promises for which the Liberals stood in the last election contest, the Gleaner came out strongly in opposition to the Government,—much to the chagrin of the Government and its "reptile press."

The independent Journal, of Ottawa, however, defends the Gleaner, and says: "A suspicion arises that the Advertiser does not know the difference between the word 'Liberal' and the word 'government'."

"What is Liberalism? Is Liberalism the set of principles and promises upon which the Liberal party attained power so short a time ago as four years ago?"

"If so, then the Gleaner is Liberal. The Gleaner has not changed. It has neither deserted the Liberal principles of 1896, nor formulated new ones. It advocates now what it advocated then. The change is in papers like the London Advertiser, which so glibly repudiate the Gleaner. They are the papers which have abandoned the Liberal principles of 1896. The Gleaner stands where the Liberal party stood. The party stood against extravagance, against Protection, against railway subsidies. So did the Gleaner; so does the Gleaner. The party stood for economical and business-like administration, for tariff-for-revenue, for reduction of public debt. So did the Gleaner; so does it today. So did the London Advertiser; so does it not today. So did other Liberal papers which, in common with the Advertiser, now repudiate the Gleaner; so do they not stand now. Then what are they now, the Advertiser and these others? Why, they are Government papers."

"There you have the Advertiser's mistake in a nutshell. Its mistake is in saying that the Gleaner is not a Liberal paper; the phrase should have been that the Gleaner is not a Government paper. That would have been strictly correct. The Government does not own the Gleaner's opinions body and bones, as practically the Government owns the opinions of the Advertiser and others. The Advertiser and these others have no principles that the Government does not like them to have. What the Government or the party leaders come to think to be expedient to help them in power, that at once and without argument becomes the conviction of the Advertiser and its class. One day the party leaders cry economy; the Advertiser cries economy, too. Next day the leaders get into power and then cry that it is a growing time, and more public money must be spent than they used to denounce the Tories for spending; next day the Advertiser echoes that this is a growing time and that rightly more money is spent than the Tories used to spend. One year the party leaders say the public debt must be reduced; the Advertiser cries that the public debt must be reduced. Next year the party leaders, having arrived at office, announce increase in public debt; the Advertiser says increase in the public debt is just what this country needs. One season the party leaders say that if they get into power they will cut down the expenditure by three or four million dollars; the Advertiser says the expenditure certainly should and can be cut down by several million of dollars. Having attained office, the party leaders instead send the expenditure up ten millions; at once the Advertiser exclaims the splendid use the Government is making of the public money, and says it is a good thing to put the expenditure up ten millions. One period finds the Liberal party leaders denouncing bonuses, subsidies, duties, bounties and all that; none so loudly denunciatory in accord as the Advertiser. Another period dawns and lo! a Liberal Government is plastering all-comers with bonuses and subsidies, and sticking up duties and bounties; and no trumpet toots louder for that Government's course than the trumpet of the Advertiser.

"Well, there may be good reason and good defence for the Liberal Government's course; also there may be many virtues to offset unfulfilled promises. That is not the point just now. The point is that the Government's course is not on the whole the course which Canadian Liberalism and the London Advertiser and the Huntingdon Gleaner for twenty years demanded prior to 1896 and is not a notable case of nerve that the Advertiser should so soon as this rise up to announce that the Gleaner, though sticking to all the old ideas which the Advertiser deserted, has no title to the name Liberal? If the Advertiser would confine itself to explaining that the Gleaner is not a Government organ—that the Gleaner does not travel in party leading strings—that it believes in principles rather than in office-holders—that in short its politics are not intended so much to place or keep certain men in power as to advocate consistently certain ideas believed to be for the public good,—why, then no one would need to take exception to the Advertiser's views of the Gleaner's case. But as it is, why, the Advertiser should be more careful of its phraseology. People will suspect that it does not own a dictionary."

The London Advertiser is fairly representative of the Patriot and Pioneer—we were going to add the Guardian,—but remembered in time that that organ has not professed any political principles and may even yet oppose the Government which perpetrated the Plebiscite humbug and avoided the prohibition vote;—the Huntingdon Gleaner stands for the old Liberalism which Laurier-Tarte and other associates have deserted. We quote from the Gleaner today an article which ought to be widely read, and particularly by the Liberals. It will not be found in the Patriot or Pioneer—we fear that it will not be found in that most interesting specimen of independent journalism, The Guardian. But it ought to be read and studied by the readers of those papers.

Eclipse Picnic.

The ladies of Mount Stewart, viewing the necessity of improving the sidewalks in the village, intend holding a mammoth picnic on

SATURDAY, 18th Inst.

There will be a well stocked saloon, tea tables, dancing booths, swings, bowling alley and other amusements of a very attractive nature.

Nothing will be left undone to make this picnic the outing of the season. Everything will be provided to please the taste and fancy of an epicure.

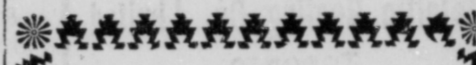

The grounds selected for the occasion is but a stone's throw from the river, where the speckled beauties abound in profusion. So if picnics are not in your line, arm yourself with a fishing rod and spend a pleasant while angling in the placid waters of the Hillsboro.

Arrangements will be made for a special train or a steamer from Charlottetown on that day (of which due notice will be given) to place excursionists on the spot.

Be sure and make a note of the date, the 18th, as it will be a gala day at Mount Stewart.
