Rich and Poor,

Prince and Peasant, the Millionaire and Day Laborer, by their common use of this remedy, attest the world-wide reputation of Ayer's Pills. Leading physicians recommend these pills for Stomach and Liver Troubles, Costiveness, Biliousness, and Sick Headache; also, for Rheumatism, Jaundice, and Neuralgia. They are sugar-coated; contain no opium; are prompt, but mild, in operation; and, therefore, the very best medicine for Family Use, as well as for Travelers and Tourists.

The "Galatea"

A LATE ADDITION TO THE FISHING FLEET OF THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

If there is one part of Canada more than another that is profiting by the policy pursued by the Dominion Government, Lunenburg, Lashava, Lockport and others of the seaport towns of Nova Scotia are assuredly among the most successful. Each year sees additions to their splendid fleet of fishing schooners, and each season the owners and fishermen are becoming wealthier. One of the latest additions to the fleet hailing from Lunenburg is the two-topmast schooner Galatea, now loading at Cardigan Bridge. This vessel was launched on the 21st October last, and was built by Messrs. J. & D. Smith, of Lunenburg. She is 98 tons burthen, and in every respect is a most superior vessel; finished and fitted with the best of material and outfit, costing some $6,000. Her lines are very fine, and such as only can be seen in the best class of racing yachts, and her lofty spars are calculated to carry an immense spread of sail. The writer, in conversation with Capt. Zinck, who commands this splendid schooner, and who is an excellent specimen of the shrewd, careful, yet off-handed descendants of the Dutch settlers of Nova Scotia, learned a great deal about the fishing business as prosecuted in that Province. Capt. Zinck says that the fishermen of Nova Scotia are making money fast. For five months' work it is no unusual occurrence for ordinary men to receive from $300 to $350, and many vessels clear from $2,200 to $2,800 during the same time. When we remember that all expenses of the voyage are paid by the vessel; that no calls of any amount, excepting for clothes, are taken out of the fisherman's pay; that they receive the whole amount of their share when the season is ended about the 1st of September, we can easily see that these men are doing well. And they save their money, for they are a careful, frugal class of people. Instead of spending their earnings foolishly, like many who fish out of American ports, these men either put their savings in a bank or invest it in some profitable enterprise, many of them owning shares in vessels they sail in. Very few of the Nova Scotia vessels go fishing in the winter time, and out of the hundreds who sail from Lunenburg and adjoining ports, only one man was lost last year. How different is this record to the sad tale of the drowned on George's Banks! Another noticeable remark was made by Captain Zinck, viz: that although the American vessels went fishing both winter and summer, few of the fishermen ever made any money. In one way or another their hard earnings are taken from them, and at the end of each year the American fishermen, who have saved any money, is the exception. Capt. Zinck fell across one of our "good Grits" the other day who was denouncing Sir John's Government, and expatiating on the extravagance of the Dominion cutters. But the Captain quickly showed what the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces think of the Conservative policy of protecting our fisheries for the use of our own fishermen. As he aptly remarked, the money paid for maintaining the cutters is divided amongst our people; and their vigilance is so handicapping the Americans that a few years will see the Yankee flag driven from our shores. With our own fishermen prospering, thereby enabling them to obtain a greater number of better vessels, and better gear, the number of men employed in this business will be doubled and quadrupled, and this Island will reap a substantial benefit in the increased amount of our produce they will require. Long may the Galatea sail successfully, and may Capt. Zinck only resign his command for a better schooner, when such is built.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Stropie Case gain.

STROPIE.—"Vidette" begins another long and disjointed letter to the Patriot by expressing regret that he has to refer to the Stropie case again. I rather think by this time he also regrets that ever he touched the subject. Now, however, that he has got into the scrape, he seems bound to keep it up—and I am bound to reply to his spiteful attacks.

In my last letter I showed that "Vidette" is no lover of justice or fair play—nor of free speech either, I might have added, whenever he has the backing to suppress it. I also showed by his record as a public man that he is too devoted a partisan to deal justly with his political opponents. And in the present instance, animosity and personal hate towards the Coroner, coupled with his own political ends and aims are what moves him to interfere. He is after the Coroner—of course he is—and repeats his charges against him for the third time—only. I have already replied to these charges, and if my reply is not intelligible to him, I cannot give him understanding, and must only leave him where he is, until light dawns upon him from some other quarter.

And while he and his "expectant public" are waiting to be enlightened I shall pass on to notice, first, his sneering allusions to Dr. Muttart having been twice defeated in election contests. It is fiddler's news to be told that Dr. Muttart was defeated. Everybody knew that long ago. "Vidette," however, in his letter, must needs repeat it twice, winding up with a clumsy attempt at wit about a "popular whale that spewed him home, as did the one of old, the other Jonah." A popular whale! Whales are not popular, as a general rule. At least the great fish that swallowed Jonah is not any more popular than his neighbors; and to say that he spewed Jonah home is not borne out by the facts recorded in Holy Writ. "Vidette's" popular whale idea is not on a par with what he told his hearers on a recent occasion, viz.: that Moses stretched forth his rod and commanded the Red Sea to divide. I would advise him after this to leave scriptural quotations and illustrations alone, as in that line he is everything but a success.

And now let us see what he has to say about the dead man, Stropie. He says Stropie was among those who attacked Doyle and McLean. I deny it. Dead men tell no tales, but there is one still living, McNeill, who can prove, and who did prove, that Stropie was innocent of the assault. Doyle said in his evidence that although he hadn't seen the dead man lying at McNeill's house, he believed from the description he got of him from others, that he was the man who came to his (Doyle's) rescue the previous evening. Doyle was mistaken. Stropie was not there. McLean, I am aware, swore that Stropie was present among the attacking party. I make no comment as to his statement, except to say that McNeill swore to the very opposite, and so also will swear, if called on to do so, four others of the Orient's crew.

"Vidette's" statement that after McPhee and Keays had given their evidence, the Coroner was desirous of closing the case, is false. The inquest was adjourned for further evidence by request of the Coroner, as the jurymen can testify. Keays was not examined till next day, among the "rebutting" witnesses obtained, and he swore that it was J. R. McLean who fired the shot a minute or so before Stropie disappeared over the bank. So the rebutting evidence did not mend matters much. But why, I am asked, was not David Collins examined? Well, why was he not? According to "Vidette," a political opponent of the Coroner's was on his trial. If Collins's evidence would have cleared McLean from the charge of having fired the shot, the latter should have secured it. The jurymen came to the conclusion that they had heard evidence sufficient on which to find a verdict, and so the case closed. "Vidette" can get Collins's affidavit yet if he likes; but he won't, for Collins, I am told, is ready to swear that it was not he who fired the shot in question. The Collins move is simply a game of bluff on the part of the Patriot writer. There are at least a dozen persons besides Collins whose evidence can be obtained, if the case is to go further. And I may as well tell him just here that the Attorney-General did not abuse the Coroner for not holding a post mortem in the first instance. If "Vidette" has been told that he did, he has been misinformed. If he will give me the name of his informant, however, I may be able to let a little light in on the way the Magistrates conducted the trial of the Orient's crew. Coroner's courts, he will find then, are not the only ones open to criticism.

I would just add by way of conclusion that his attack upon two of the witnesses may be safely left with an impartial public to say whether it is justified or not. Both McPhee and Keays were independent witnesses. The former is an industrious young man. True, last spring, with two or three acquaintances who were on a bit of a time, he and they got into trouble, and were fined by the magistrates of Souris. I don't know what the magistrates called their offence, but this I know that they were only found guilty of common assault, and for "Vidette" to say that they were guilty of "housebreaking" is brutal in the extreme. These young men took the temperance pledge since then, and bear as good a character in this community as any other men in it. The other witness, Thomas K. Ays, (who is well-known here as a kind and reliable young fellow) we are told, sells whiskey on a corner. Well, if he does, "Vidette," who is a sworn magistrate, should look after him, and as he has volunteered the information, while he is about it, he should, if he wishes to be considered constant, inform upon others who sell the ardent, in places nearer to him than Keay's corner.
