

MAPLE TRAY PRESENTED TO SPEAKER

Prof. Ian Lachlan Campbell of the extension department of Mt. Allison University, Sackville is presented with a tray following his address Saturday at the Canadian Managing Editors conference here.

Making the presentation is E.W. Larracey, left of Moncton. Mrs. Campbell looks on. Prof. Campbell suggested there might be merit in a press which gave a partisan view of public affairs. It might help promote a more de-sensitized view by the public on vital questions. The tray presented to Prof. Campbell was of maple with copper inset and was made at Alberton.

14 Youths Arrested In Montreal March

By ALEXANDER FARRELL, MONTREAL (CP)—Shouts of gesticulation from teen-agers ringing in their ears, police arrested 14 persons Monday during a separatist demonstration at Place Ville Marie in the heart of Montreal.

Arrests occurred quickly when a few persons tried to keep the demonstration going by whipping up another frenzy of chanting and getting in the way of the police.

Two youths were arrested trying to overturn a station wagon belonging to an English-language radio station, (CKGM) with the driver at the wheel.

At this point the demonstrators were a slightly larger group than the one that had rallied at Lafontaine Park in east-central Montreal, but still appeared to consist mainly of teenagers. Each time police arrested one of the group, they were followed part way to their cars by others shouting gesticulation.

The march lasted about an hour.

En route, the school pupils stopped in front of Royal Victoria College, a McGill University women's residence, for two minutes and booned a statue of Queen Victoria. A few of them ran up the steps of the building waving placards but were chased away by police. Six police cars accompanied the young demonstrators on the last phase of their march, to Place Ville Marie from Royal Victoria College.

Crossing Ste. Catherine St., a party of four or five boys broke away from the group and started to hoist one of their number on their shoulders so he could reach a Union Jack and Red Ensign in a small flagstand on the side of a store.

stopped a constable west and told them to "beat it." They did.

"When Central Canada says it does not want to give us anything I say they are not even beginning to pay back what they owe us for our contributions to them."

Premier Shaw, in stating the province's position, ranged in subject from education to farming, fisheries to transportation, all needing assistance. "But our voice is one crying in the wilderness."

In his plea to the editors to see for themselves what had happened since Confederation to a once prosperous colony he stated the press stood for the right and for national solidarity and "we invite you to draw editorial attention to the needs of smaller areas."

He was thanked by Conference Peter Preston who told him "we are more than satisfied with our reception in Prince Edward Island. You may not be able to compete with other places in wealth, but you can compete with any in hospitality."

CLOSING FUNCTION

As it was the closing function of the Conference the president also extended a sincere thank you to Councillor John Nicholson and City Comptroller John Buller, representing this city, for the civic reception tendered the evening earlier at the hotel. He also offered the appreciation of all present to Burton Lewis, executive editor of The Guardian-Patriot "for the tremendous amount of hard work you put into making this gathering such a success."

Freuding at the dinner, which was given by the provincial government, was Welfare Minister Henry Wedge who in first greeting the guests said "we will have many organizations and occupations represented here this year, but none which can have a greater influence on the public than yours."

Just before the dinner began, an official Town Crier strode into the dining room to the ringing of a bell and cry of Oyez, Oyez. He read a proclamation signed by the lieutenant-governor calling for the celebration of Centennial Year and then presented the illuminated scroll to Mr. Preston.

Seated at the head table were Premier and Mrs. Shaw, Hon. Henry Wedge and Mrs. Wedge, Mr. and Mrs. Burton Lewis, C.M. Fellman, North Bay, first vice president, and Mrs. Fellman; R. D. Owen, Kingston, second vice president, and Mrs. Owen; W. H. Metcalfe, secretary-treasurer, and Mrs. Metcalfe, Ottawa.
