RELIGION AND LIFE

By Very Rev. George O. Pidgeon, D.D., LL.D. First Moderator of the United Church of Canada

THE FORMS OF GREATNESS CHANGE WITH THE YEARS

A writer in the Interpreter's Bible draws attention to the significance in history of Jesus' saying: "The last shall be first and the first last." One generation or century hails a man as chief; the next "looks at him with a blank stare, unrecognizing." "Across the years it is an infallible process. Paul takes precedence over Nero Martin Luther over the Pope at Rome and the Emperor at Worms, John Bunyan over Charles II."

Then he refers to Shelley's sonnet Ozymandias. In this poem by a visitor from the ancient east he had found in the desert "two vast and trunkless legs of stone." Nearby, half covered with sand, lay a shattered face, but still stamped on the stone were to be seen the frown of cold command and the curled lip of scorn. Engraved on the pedestal were these words: "My name is Ozymandias, king of kings: Look on my works, ye mighty and despair."

Now this king's boast was that he had surpassed all the kingdoms around him in his achievements and his splendor. He had accepted his generation's standards of greatness and had excelled in applying them.

But, as time went on, new figures appeared on history's stage with different ideals, and therefore with different conceptions of moral stature—and what he considered his triumphs they considered vanity, and he was forgotten.

History is full of surprises. Greatness appears in new forms age by age. Creative genius has broken away from the ideas and methods of its past and struck out into the untrodden future, cutting new trails through the wilderness ahead. Socrates did this in the realm of thought and the daring of his thinking brought martyrdom.

The prophets of Israel rejected the orthodoxy of their time in both morals and religion, and persecution was their reward. No one ever broke with popular beliefs as decisively as Jesus did, and it brought Him to Calvary. In our own time men like Livingstone, Mot and Schweitzer started their careers along lines approved by their fellow-workers, but found ways of service strange and new, and their fame rests on their originality and independence. Kant began by interpreting the philosophers before him, but his unique contribution is due to the fact that Hume's writings awakened him out of his "dogmatic slumber."

In literature Shakespeare was once greeted as an upstart and intruder, and poets like Wordsworth, Keats, Browning and Whitman, shocked the critics of their time. Wilberforce and Lincoln in reform and Spurgeon and Moody in the pulpit followed fearlessly the same divine light.

In these cases, and many more, greatness was found in the man's own inspiration and in his loyalty to truth and duty as God gave him to see it.

For us on life's common level the call is to do what we are appointed to do to the best of our ability. "Our utmost for His highest" is the only divine standard. In Jesus' parables of the "Talents" and the "Pounds" the emphasis is on diligence and fidelity to a sacred trust. Gifts may differ, but judgment is not according to our
